A TOUCHING STORY. Phil. Bobster once was much esteemed Until he steamed too high; Until he stamed too high;
Then he fell low, and long it seemed
The fellow thus might die:
Fair Molly, once his promised bride,
Would not let him come nigh her;
"Oh, Molly, fie!" he often cried,
But nought could mollify her,

Down in a little moss grown cot,

Hedged round by wild forget me-not,

Near where the ocean's thundering roar

Turns such soft music on the shore, Flinging its foam and useless spray To pebbles on the beach that lay, Lived a sweet maiden, fair and young As ever poet dreamed or sung But oft she wandered to the sea And now her starry eyes are wet. While in her face despair is set. For he she loves on earth the best Her quick glance on the waves so dark Descries her lover's sinking bark. Tho' every one is lost beside. Her ocean rover stems the tide, Is borne in safety to the shore, To her joy-breaking heart once more But what I think was strangely true, His clothing had not got wet through His clothes had been a life preserver. EVENING BULLETIN.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1866.

THE PRESIDENT'S FRIENDS. If one thing, more than any other, is calculated to awaken a doubt in President Johnson's mind as to the soundness and safety of the position which he s assumed towards Congress, it is the character of the friends he has made by it. Few men have been more bitterly denounced and persecuted for loyalty's sake than he. Few men have run such a gauntlet of abuse and calumny, of personal insult and outrage. Both before and since his accession to the Chief Magistracy he has gloried in the broad line of demarcation that his sturdy reprobation of treason and traitors, and of the friends of treason and traitors, had drawn between him and his old political associates. Does that broad line still surround him? The President must ask himself the question, and the people will certainly ask it.

We find the most direct and obvious answer in the character of the men who surround and infest the White House, the journals in various sections that applaud and sustain the veto, and the political demonstrations that have hailed with delight the President's apparent change of position. When the loyal Governor of a great State waits wearily in the President's ante-room, while Mr. Thos. B. Florence again and again slips in and out of Mr. Johnson's presence, unchallenged and unbidden, should we feel no doubt? When loyal Senators and Representatives are crowded out of the President's room by a set of copperhead politicians, and even they of the lower grade of the tribe, should we feel no doubt? When the journals that endorse the, but yesterday, hated and hunted Andrew Johnson are the World and the Daily News of N. Y., the Age of Philada., The Examiner of Richmond, et id genus omne, should not the President doubt and fear the tendencies and results of his policy? The test is a fair and sound one and is being everywhere applied in the public mind. We cannot imagine that associations like these can come to any but the worst results, and we still cling to the hope that the President will see that the men and the journals which now surround and applaud and serenade and salute him embody and express the whole of the Northern sentiment which has been in opposition to the government throughout the war. No good friend of the country desires a conflict with Mr. Johnson., His Cabinet, the Houses of Congress, the loyal masses of the North deprecate a quarrel with him. His course from the beginning of the rebellion to its close endeared him to the people, but it was because it was a bold, brave, uncompromising course, which gave no quarter to disloyalty, held no fellowship with rebels or copperheads, and was the assurance that the blood and treasure of the North shall not have been spent in vain. This has been Mr. Johnson's chosen course, and it is impossible for him to deviate from it his arms a bride who owned to be bewithout destroying himself and sacrificing all the high hopes of the nation under 30 comforted themselves with that have been centred upon him. We brides also reported between 40 and 50. believe that he still desires to adhere to Five gay damsels aged between 60 and BEMARKABLY (LOWPRIVES, it, but there is but one way by which it

It is impossible for Mr. Johnson to retain the confidence of the people, unless he makes up his mind to purge the White. House of the class of men who now infest it. They are not the people who should surround the loyal President of the United States. If he will allow the people to believe that he is acting from pure and patriotic motives, and not from the promptings of the corrupt and intriguing politicians whom he has permitted to swarm about his person, the people will go great lengths to sustain him. They will agree to honest differences of opinion upon many of the details of public policy, but there are cardinal truths, taught to them by Andrew Johnson himself, upon which they have planted themselves, and from which they will not move so much as a single inch. The whole North understands, perfectly, the issues of the rebellion and will not consent to ignore them. The masses of intelligent, reading, thinking people of the loyal States have no confidence in the galvanized loyalty of the South. Their ordinary common sense and their plain instincts teach them that it is too soon to exercise any such confidence, and they are not at all in sympathy with that desperate anxiety which the rebels of the South and their friends at the North feel to rush the revolted States back into the posts of honor and power which they abandoned when they plunged us into

There is another well-recognized principle which has been adopted by our people, and by which they mean to stand. The Emancipation Proclamation made Mr. Lincoln the liberator of the slaves of the South. He was, in its highest sense, their "Moses," leading them "out of the house of bondage." We do not mean to leave them, quite yet, to the mercies of their old taskmasters. We simply mean to give these poor, ignorant people a clear field and a fair chance. This the Freedmen's Bureau proposes to do. Its operations are not forever. It extends a helping hand to a race staggering blindly out of the darkness of slavery into the sudden blaze of Freedom, and it holds them up and guides and protects them, until, accustomed to their new condition, they shall be able to walk and work and live alone. It is this plain and simple dictate of humanity which has been checked and thwarted by Mr. Johnson and the few Republican Senators who have faltered and failed in the hour of trial. It is for this that the North will take its stand, and no combination can long exist which repudiates or avoids this obvious duty to the race which Mr. Lincoln, in the crowning glory of his life, set free.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES AND DEATHS. The system of registration of births, marriages and deaths, in Philadelphia, has been much improved during the last few years, but it is manifestly imperfect still, in some respects. The deaths are, we believe, reported accurately, because no interments can take place until they are reported. But the births and marriages are, in many cases, not registered. This may be seen at once by looking at the figures in the report of the Register. According to this document, there were in Philadelphia, last year, 15,428 births, while the number of deaths was 17,169. It is unreasonable to suppose that there were nearly two thousand more deaths than births in the city. It is manifest that a large number of births are never reported. Some physicians and professional accoucheurs probably neglect to make reports of births, while a great many take place without professional aid, and there is no record made of any of these. This is particularly the case among the poor people. Among the colored population there are obviously many cases not reported; for the whole number of colored births, last year, was only 280, while our total colored population is at least 25,000. The deaths of colored people were 1,397, so that if the report of births were correct, the colored race would soon disappear in the city; but there are no signs of anything of the kind.

The marriages of 1865 registered in Philadelphia numbered, in all, 6,864, or an average of 19 per day throughout the year. This, also, is probably considerably below the real number; for ministers and magistrates are not always very particular in reporting all the nuptial knots they tie. The matrimonial statistics present some curious facts. The largest monthly number of marriages was in September, 624; the smallest in November, 509. Of the whole number of persons married, 8,168 were natives of the United States, and 5,072 were foreigners, and perhaps it is well to mention, for the benefit of the particularly curious, the remarkable fact that there were precisely as many women married as there were men! The native-born men seem to prefer their countrywomen to the foreign, for of 3,908 of these native men, only 355 wedded foreigners. Of the 2,705 foreign bridegrooms, 2,006 selected foreign brides. Of the whole number of brides, 2,367 were foreigners. The statements concerning the ages of the nouveaux mariés reveal some curious facts. In most cases the relative ages of the contracting parties seem to have been in contracting parties seem to have been in the lowest cases the relative ages of the contracting parties seem to have been in the lowest cases the relative r accordance with ordinary prejudice, the husbands being generally the older. But there are 8 cases of men under 20 marrying women between 20 and 30; 36 men under 25 married women between 30 and 40; and one youth, under 25, took to tween 40 and 50; while 7 young bucks year. Two gay youths between 60 and 70 got brides under 20.

The record of births for several years past presents some interesting facts. In 1861, the first year of the war, there were registered 17,271 births. In 1862 there were only 14,741, a falling off of 2,530. During the three years succeeding, the annual number exceeded fifteen thousand, and it is fair to presume that in 1866, the first year after the war, the old average will be restored or perhaps exceded. There were, in 1865, 3 cases of births of triplets and 179 of twins. The males born numbered 8,187 and the females 7,241. This excess of males is considerably above the usual proportion; but it has often been noticed that in time of war, and just. after war, the births of males are largely in excess, and it is argued that it is in this way that nature restores the balance of the sexes, disturbed by the losses of warfare. This illustration and verification of the theory in our own community is deserving of record. We have selected a few points from the abstract of the Register's report furnished to the press. Perhaps when it appears in full there may be found some other points worth recurring
