THE EXECUTIVE POLICY.

Interview of Governor Cox, of Ohio, with the President—What was Said on Both

WASHINGTON, February 26th.—The following important letter was read to-night by Governor Cox, of Ohio, to the Union Representatives in Congress from that

WASHINGTON, Monday, February 26th, WASHINGTON, Honday, Footaly
1866.—General George B. Wright, Chairman
af the Union Central Committee, Columbus, Ohio: My DEAR SIR: On Saturday last I had the honor of an interview with the President, which I regarded as of sufficient inand importance to make it proper that I should reduce to writing my remem-brance of his statements, whilst they were fresh in my memory, since he seemed to me, in a perfectly free and unpremeditated conversation to exhibit with peculiar clear-ness the processes of his own mind in reachof his opinions, and to express them with such manifest candor and freedom from personal feeling, that I could not but think that if he would consent to it good might be done by making his statements public. Accordingly, I again waited upon him this morning, to make known what I had done, to ask his verification of the truth of my report, and his consent to make same known to the country. Although ha was perfectly unaware of my purpose to reduce his remarks to writing, and I myself had no such intention when I first called upon him, he most frankly gave his con-sent, and assented to the accuracy of my report, which is as follows; He said he had no thoughts which he was not willing to avow; that his policy had simply aimed at the earliest possible restora-tion of peace on the basis of loyalty. No congressional policy had ever been adopted, and therefore, when he entered upon the duies of his office, he was obliged to adopt one of his own. He had in some sense inherited that of Mr. Lincoln, with which he thought he agreed, and that was substantially the one which he had carried out. Congress had no just ground of complaint that he had done so, for they had not seen fit to declare their views or adopt any measures embodying what could be called a policy of restoration. He was satisfied that no long continuance of military government could be tolerated; that the whole country would properly de-mand the restoration of a truly civil government, and not to give it to the lately rebellious States would be an admission of the failure of the Administration and of the party who had carried through the war to prove themselves equal to the exigency. now that the work of destruction was over and that of rebuilding had begun. Military government alone would not pacify the

At the end of a long period of such govern ment we would be no nearer, and probably not so near the end, than now, and would have the same work to do. Hence, there i a real necessity of adopting a policy which should restore the civil government fully just as soon as the rebellion should be thoroughly ended, and these conditions accepted by the South, which were to be regarded as absolutely necessary to the peace of the country.

One central idea had controlled him in the whole matter; and this was, that the proper system of pacification should be one which tended everywhere to stimulate the loyalty of the people of the South themselves, and make it the spring of loyal contact the proper logication, rather than to duct by proper legislation, rather than to impose upon them laws and conditions by direct external force. Thus, in the case of the freedman's bureau, he was not against the idea of the freedmen's bureau, in toto, for he had used it, and was still using it. It might continue for a period of more than a year yet. He had contemplated that, either by pro-He had contemplated that, either by pro-clamation of his own or by some action of more terrible fate of being burned to death. Congress as a condition of peace, the technical end of the rebellion would probably be declared at some period perhaps not very remote; and as he understood the pre-sent law the bureau might continue a year from that time. Meanwhile he could say to the South: "It depends upon yourselves to say whether the bureau shall be discontinued at an earlier day, for I will put an end to it just as soon as you, by proper action for the protection of the freedmen,

Thus, said he, the hope of getting rid of the institution stimulates them to do what is right, whilst they are not discourged by is right, whilst they are not discourged by the idea that there is no hope of an end to what they regard as a sort of military go-vernment. If, on the other hand, the bureau were to be made a permanent thing by degislation, which on its face appears to be part of the fixed law of the land, all the ob-jections he had urged in his message applied jections he had urged in his message applied in full force to it, and instead of encourging the South to loyalty, you tend to drive them to desperation and make their hatred of the Government invererate.

The same principal of stimulating loyalty was shown in the manner in which he held martial law over them. Whenever they should show so peaceful and law-abiding a condition of their community that martial law was not needed, it should be removed. Their own co nduct would thus determine the matter, and the desire and interest of all the best people be increased to put down disturbances and outbreaks, to protect Union men and obey the laws, because by so doing they would hasten the withdrawal of the di rect interference of the military arm in their

In precisely the same way, and under the influence of the same idea, he has acted in regard to civil affairs generally in that section, regarding it as necessary and proper to impose upon the rebellious States conditions which would guarantee the safety of the country: and regarding the then exist-ing affairs of the local governments as having disqualified themselves, by their treason, for continuance in power, he deposed them and established provisional governments. Then he asked himself what conditions ought to be demanded of them, and how their disposition to accept them in good faith might be stimulated.

The conditions, viz. the amendment of State constitutions excluding slavery, the acceptance of the same amendment of the United States Constitution, the repudiation of the rebel debt and the admission of the freedmen to various rights, &c., everybody is familiar with. To stimulate them to accept these conditions, being such as using his best judgment, and in the absence of any congressional plan, he thought the nearest right of any he could frame, he engaged that on their acceptance, with evidence of good faith, he would permit them to reorganize their State governments, elect legislatures, &c., and so far as Executive acts could d so, would restore them to their position in the Union of States. They had so far accepted his conditions that he did not regard the experiment as a failure, but as a success. He had accord-angly reorganized the Post-office Department everywhere among them, had reopened trade and removed restrictions thereon through the Treasury Department, and in like manner in all the executive departments, recognized them as States in the Union, only keeping enough of a military hold to protect the freedmen, as he had before stated, and to induce them to do something more thorough in that direction. Now but one thing remained in which those States did not exercise the full rights of States, and that is representation gress. In this he had advised that the same principle of stimulating loyalty be applied as in the other respects which he had

He would admit only such representatives as were in faci loyal men, giving satis-factory evidence of this. Whenever a State and he he would admit none but such loyal men, so that other States or districts might be thus induced to elect and send similar men. When they had all done this their sentation would be full, and the work representation v

Such was his plan. He did not ask to be the judge of the elections and qualifications of members of Congress, or of their loyalty. Congress was its own judge, and he had no dream of interfering with its constitutional rights; but he felt like urging upon them, and upon the country, that this mode of finishing the work, so nearly completed in other respects, was the only feasible one which had been presented, and that it was which had been presented, and that it was impossible to ignore the fact that the States were exercising their rights and enjoying their privileges within the Union—were, in short, restored in all other respects, and that it is too late to question the fundamental right of representation.

I then remarked to him that I had heard it suggested that legislation could properly

I then remarked to him that I had neard it suggested that legislation could properly be made by Congress, purely civil in its character, providing for the protection of the freedmen by United States courts of in-ferior jurisdiction, in all cases where the States did not do so themselves. He replied that such an idea would run exactly parallel to his plan, but he had not thought it yet time to fix his own ideas of the precise mode of accomplishing this end, because we had a margin of time lasting till after the next session of Congress, during which the present freedmen's bureau could continu in operation; and, if before that time th Southern States should recognize the necessity of passing proper laws themselves, and providing a proper system of protection for the freedmen, nothing further on our par would be necessary. If they did not do what they ought, there would then be time enough to elaborate a plan.

He then referred briefly to the fact, the men who have been disloyal were rejoicing over his veto message, saying, that if these men, in good faith, adopted the views opolicy he had himself held and acted upon and which he had so freely elaborated in his annual message and explained to me the country surely could have no cause fo sorrow in that. If disloyal men and rebel everywhere, North and South, should cor dially give in their adherence to the cond tions of restoration he had uniformly in the kind of pacification loyal men every where should rejoice in. The more the were committed to such a course the bette he would like it, for if they were not sincer they would at least diminish their power dangerous opposition in future. His who heart was with the body of true men wh had carried the country through the wa and he earnestly desired to maintain a co dial and perfect understanding with them.

This sentiment and purpose he regarded as entirely consistent with determined opposition to the obstructive policy of those extremists, who, as he believed, would keep the country in chaos till absolute ruin might come upon us.

Such, my dear sir, is the conversational statement of the President on this important matter; and if you could meet his straightforward, honest look, and hear the hearty tones of his voice, as I did, I am well assured that you would believe, with me, that, although he may not receive per-sonal attacks with the equanimity and for bearance Mr. Lincoln used to show, there is no need to fear that Andrew Johnson is not hearty and sincere in his adhesion to the principles upon which he was elected.

Very truly, yours, J. D. Cox.

FIRE AT CHATTANOOGA-LOSS OF LIFE. The Chattanooga Gazette of the 20th has the following: About one o'clock on Sunday morning, the building on the corner of Sixth and Pine street, lately used as a Government employe's hospital, and more re-cently as a school-house for freedmen, was overed on fire. The bulding being constructed of dry pine lumber, the flames spread rapidly, and before the fire depart-ment was able to effect anything the buildng was completely enveloped. The charred remains of a human body was found among the ruins with nothing left but the head and entrails. John Hall, of Michigan, near Detroit, formerly in the employment of the Government, occupied a berth in the corner of the building where the burnt body was found, and he is supposed to have perished in the flames. J. D. Blackford, Esq. took charge of the remains, and empannele a jury of inquest, but after examining several witnesses, adjourned till the following evening.

A STRIKE.—The New Lisbon, (O.) Patriot says that about two months ago the New Lisbon Oil Company stopped boring a well in that vicinity after reaching a depth of 620 feet, with salt water and a slight show of gas, On the 11th inst., the well commenced throwing water forty or fifty feet in the air.
Every minute it boils up with the sound of an engine taking on steam, and for a few seconds throws water to a great height; it er district sent a loyal man, properly elected then subsides and the next minute repeats, and qualified, he would think it right to admit him the same as from any other State when they expect to "strike ile."
