Few have endeavored to follow the soul in its retirement, to note what it then does, thinks, or speaks. That it is powerful, that it is eloquent, that it is poetical then, if at no other time, has been demonstrated by many examples. But the waking and the sleeping soul are identical; what the latter does when freed from all fetters, the former would do of it dared. The character cannot be put off, like a change of raiment, when we step from one condition of existence Into the other; our virtues, our vices, our passions, our aspirations cling to us sleeping or waking. The greatest writers have paid most attention to the visions of the night, "when deep sleep falleth upon man." Shakspeare is rich in descriptions of the avenues to the palace of dreams, sometimes paved with horror, and overshadowed by shapes of agony and dread. Listen to the murderer-king, as he reveals, from his dreamless couch, his cravings for the solace of forgetfulness: Mow many thousands of my poorest subjects Are at this hour asleep! O Sleep, gentle Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted

That thou no more will weigh my eyelids down, And steep my senses in forgetfulness?
Why rather, Sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs, Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee, And hushed with buzzing night-flies to thy Thanin the perfumed chambers of the great? Sleep, however, has no objections to the buzzing of night-flies, to smoky cabins, or to hard pallets, provided he can lay his head on the soft pillow of a clear conscience. The inmates of the smoky cabins might not have butchered their cousins by treachery, might not have put strangers to death without law or justice, might not have indented the peaceful plains of their country with the hoofs of hostile steeds, as the regal criminal to whom sleep refused to come had done. What frighted away the gentle god was the howl of the hellhounds that attend on guilt, the Erinys as Shakspeare himself calls her, that tracks the blood-spiller to his grave. Well might he wail and lament as one with whom "nature's sweet restorer refused to abide. To him, with more justice than to the lover maddened with jealousy, might it be said:

Not poppy, nor mandragora, Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world, Shall ever medicine thee to that sweet sleep

Which thou ow'dst yesterday. Pallets hard or soft have not much to do with the slumbers that visit those who lie upon them. I have enjoyed the sweetest of sweet sleeps stretched on pease-haulm in a cow-house; on a stone floor in a caravansarai, with five thousand armed enemies prowling about on the outside; on horseback in a dark night on the edge of precipices; and exclaimed with Sancho: "Blessed be the man that invented sleep! It wrappeth a man about like a garment!" Yet place occasionally enhances the delight of the sleeper, by aiding to paint his dreams with brilliant or delicate colors, and soothe the ear of his fancy with the sound of loving voices. Once, far up in the Nile, on a little mammillated sandbank, I tasted sleep in its sweetest, Mabit, down beyond the Sahara. The sun had sunk, leaving in the heavens long trails of glory-a mixture of sapphire and blood-red vapor, with saffron, amethyst and beryl. All day the thermometer had stood at 100 degrees in the shade, but so tempered by refreshing winds from the west, that it seemed then only to have reached pleasure point. There was a languor in the atmosphere, filled with the dozy drowsy hum of insects, rendered doubly slumberous by the low, rippling murmur of the great river, as it glided past towards the northern tropic. These influences subdued the mind to a pleasing melancholy, so that I passed out of the waking into the sleeping world with delicious unconsciousness. Without being too profound in the metaphysics of dreams, I yet venture to believe that the testimony of the senses enters largely into their structure; colors borrowed from the skies and landscapes around, the figures of palm trees, the masses of rock, the lake-like breadth of waters, camels horses, buffaloes, thrown confusedly to-gether by the kaleidoscopic power of fancy, converted my dream on the sandy island into a reflection of paradise. Nevertheless, when the curtain first dropped between me and the outer world, I found myself, not on a tropical river, but in my mother's garden in England, over which tropical skies expanded, tropical vegetation beautified, the banana, the minosa, and the doumpalm. Long rows of beehives, with clusters of insects entering or quitting them, stretched beside the ledges; flowers of hand as a little child. Suddenly, the sky became clouded; a deep, prolonged wait assailed the sense of hearing; the whole landscape shivered and broke up, and I woke abruptly, with the dismal howl of jackals in my ears. They were sweep-ing northward after some fleet prey, pro-bably a light gazelle; and in a few minotes the sound died away in the distance. Caim and stillness then returned, and brooded over the whole scene. Never did earth appear more beautiful than at constellations, large, liquid, flashing rather than twinkling in the dark-blue vault of infinite space. It was on such a night as that I felt sure that some antique Egyptian priest, meditating, perhaps, on that very island, persuaded himself that the voice he heard on both osiris himself. From the whole expanded surface of the rippling waves it ascended musically and solemnly into lispings of the breeze, it produced a delicious concert. At no great distance, in a grove of palms, sang the nightingale, not sullenly or sadly, as poets feign, but with a rich; full gush of joy. Was that also a dream? It may have been, for at no other time did I hear the nightingale in tropical Africa. About Cairo ber the dusky air, where, mingling with the in tropical Africa. About Cairo, her song is common, where, as she perches among cypresses, surrounded by mortuary cupolas, her notes undoubtedly brilliant hues sent forth from their tiny bells the hum of their plunderers; while my mother, in the attire of her bright youth, led me hither and thither by the sound like a lament for the dead. Physiologists admit—and if they did not, it would not be less indisputable— that the mind is not entirely separated from the senses in sleep. To demonstrate this fact, numerous experiments have at various times been made. The difficulty in such cases is to insure a report strictly conformable to truth, without additions, you will find that they differ according without abatement, without coloring—n short, an exact photograph of the dream. Shakespeare alludes to this sort of practical philosophy, and puts forth his subtle theory under show of describing the pranks of Queen Mab. His exposition is lively, and not without a dash of satire but exquisitely true to dash of satire, but exquisitely true to nature. The predominent sense being out of the question, the experiment has to be made with the other four, and first with hearing. A gentle sleeper in full health, youth, and animal spirits, has oeen set to sleep during summer in a chamber opening upon a garden, at the extreme end of which a skilful person has played soft music late in the night. The sleeper, describing her sensations, said she at first appeared to be plunged into a world of bright clouds, which folded her round, exciting sentiments of strong delight. Then she descended upon a bank of violets, while voices of exquisite harmony filled the air. Being watched by the light of a dim lamp, the sleeper's face at this time seemed pale with emotion, and presently, as the music became more and more sad, tears appeared between the eye-lashes, and gradually trickled down the cheeks. Had the sounds ceased, the ady would have awaked at once; to prevent which, a transition was skill-iully made to a lively air, which in a short time brought smiles upon the lips. No memory is sucfliiently tenacious to record without breaks or stops the mulitudinous evolutions of a dream. The leeper, who was not a mother, said she dreamed she was shedding tears because persons were forcing away from her a baby which she had at her breast; when suddenly the scene changed, and she found herself in a vast saloon, encircled by singers and dancers, sometimes eating grapes or pomegranates, drinking wine, and laughing merrily. One or two strokes of martial music striking violently upon the sensorium, awoke the sleeper at once.

In Shakspeare, we find a curious record of a wife's observations on the countenance of her sleeping husband. The passage may at first sight be thought too rolix and minute; but as many persons do in exciting circumstances talk in their sleep, the statement is not inconsistent with nature. The speaker is Lady Percy, and the time immediately before the breaking out of Northumberland's rebellion against Henry IV.

In thy faint slumbers I by thee have watched, And heard thee murmur tales of iron wars; Speak terms of manage to thy bounding steed: Cry, Courage!-to the field! And thou hast talked Of sallies and retires; of trenches, tents: Of palisadoes, frontiers, parapets, Of basilisks, of cannon, culverin;

Of prisoners' ransom, and of soldiers slain, And all the current of a heady fight. Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war, And thus hath so bestirred thee in thy sleep, That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow, Like bubbles in a late disturbed stream; And in thy face strange motions have appeared, Such as we see when men restrain their breath On some great sudden haste. Oh, what por-tents are these? Some heavy business hath mylord in hand. And I must know it, else he loves me not.

This obviously is not a mere fanciful description, but a record of the accurate study of a sleeping face. Elsewhere, in a more sportive and sarcastic mood, he suggests what would probably be the effects of touching at various points the persons of sleepers. To Queen Mab is delegated the task of awakening by the delicate pressure of her wand the imaginations of slumber's prisoners; though she is likewise represented as driving bodily in her carriage through the halls of fancy:

Her chariot is an empty hazel-nut Made by the joiner squirrel, or old grub, Time out of mind the fairies' coach-makers; And in this state she gallops night by night Through lovers' brains, and then they dream of love; On courtiers' knees, that dream on courtsies O'er lawyers' fingers, who straight dream on fees; O'er ladies' lips, who straight on kisses dream. As is implied by the various portions of this speech, the passions are the great fountains of dreams, love, pride, ambition, which exert their magic power in sleep, calling up forms of beauty, placing the individual in elevated situations, or soothing him with the exercise of power. Milton's most exquisite sonnet is based on a dream of love and sorrow: Methought I saw my late espoused saint, Come to me like Alcestis from the grave. And throughout the poetry of the world we find scattered here and there pictures or fragments from the land of dreams, more lovely than any the material world could supply.

Nevertheless, sleep is no flatterer, but gives to every man a compound of the acquisitions he has been at the pains of making, and a keen consciousness of the result of the actions which he has been in the habit of performing. But though, in the base and malignant, nature hangout during slumber a flag to warn all whom it may concern that snakes and aspics are coiled secretly within, her revelations go no further. No one can step within the curtain which conceals the delights or the agonies that come to the happy or to the unhappy man in sleep. Byron used to say he should like to know how a man felt who had committed murder-a point upon which some of his ancestors could have enlightened him. The feelings in that case would greatly depend on the part of the world and the state of the society in which the murderer might live; for there are regions in which, when one has killed and eaten his victim, he rests as comfortably as if he had supped on mutton; while there are others in which he would never again find a moment's peace, but, waking or sleeping, be hunted by remorse to his grave. It is a common belief that, in sleep, fancy and imagination wake, while reason slumand structure than the philosophers of past times; nor will discoveries be made unless through a long series of experiments on food, drink, dress, habits, air, water and situation, in connection with sleep. Others have remarked that there are wine-dreams, spirit dreams and beer-dreams; and it may be mentioned with to the scale of elevation, and are even modified by being on the north or south of the chain. If your chamber be about five or six thousand feet above the level of the sea, is is highly probable that you will experience a delicious feeling; the heart will seem light and buoyant; a gentle thrill of pleasure will pass through the whole frame; the brain seems steeped in ambrosia, and you will sink into forgetfulness through layers, as it were, of exquisite enjoyment. Even on the summit of passes, at an elevation of eight or nine thousand feet, iittle differences in the state of your sensetions is ence in the state of your sensations is perceptible; but on the Andes and Him. alaya, if you ascend much above the level of Mont Blanc, the lungs labor with the thin air, and small blood vessels are apt to start. Sleep is then disturbed beyond description, haunted by dreadful phantoms, and scarcely at all refreshing. It is still worse in places like Rome, where malaria prevails. The miasma then appears to feed upon the flame of life, diminishing its force imperceptibly, sapping the energies of the frame, rendering the mind dull and spiritless, and descending like a night mare on the soul in dreams, indescriba bly loathsome and depressing. An Italian general, talking on this subject, used a very strong expression. A night (he said) passed in the Pontine Marshes or in the Maremma is hell. When a fugitive, previous to escaping into lifelong exile, he had tried it often, and it made so terrible an impression on his memory that it might almost be said to have haunted him like a Fury through life, towards the close of which it urged him to seek by the fumes of ardent spirits, to subdue the enemy in his brain. It is equally true that pleasant odors refresh the sleeping brain, playing with its fancies, and shaping them into scenes of extraordinary beauty. SPECIAL NOTICES.
