OVER THE PLAINS.

ondence of the Philada. Evening Bulletin. SOUTH PARK, COLORADO TERRITORY, Feb. 16, 1866 .- Messrs. Editors: The silence of your correspondent for the past month is attributable to his absence from any place where there is a post office, having been engaged in traveling through various sections of the Territory, visiting parts where Uncle Sam's mail bags are but seldom seen. The mode of travel most in vogue here (horseback) is such as to afford neither time nor opportunity for writing. I have at this, my earliest opportunity, again resumed the thread of my narrative, and will in the future try to have my communications reach you with a greater degree of regularity.

In my last letter I described Messrs.Behr & Keith's process for the extraction of gold from metallic sulphurets, and gave some few instances of the necessity of desulphurizing these sulphurets in order to obtain a reasonable proportion of the pre-cious metals which they contain. That a thoroug desulphurization is necessary for profitably working Colorado ore, there no longer remains one doubt the fact that longer remains any doubt, the fact that without it but a fraction (about one-tenth) of the gold contained in the ore is obtained is all well-known to all who are and well-known to all who are amiliar with the results obtained from crude ore, treated under stamps, con-trasted with the large percentage obtained by the same stamps from 'blossom rock," which is simple ore that has been desulphurized by nature through the agencies of moisture and the heat of the sun. Since the establishment of Messrs. Behr & Keith's works, others becoming convinced of the value of desulphurization as a preliminary step in the treatment of aColorado ore, introduced other processes for this object, several of which have, to a greater or less extent, been tried and experimented upon during the winter. The severe cold of the past few months, however, has, by stop-ping the supply of water, materially de-layed such of them as are dependent on it as necessary to the successful working of other

The process, next in order, is that of Mr. Lyon, the more descrying of notice from the fact that since the first stroke was struck in the erection of his mill not a day has been lost, but operations have been steadily carried on, down to the present time, when the process is in successful operation and the gold being extracted from our refractory ores at a rapid rate, sufficient to astonish even those who are well aware how very rich our ores are. The process of Mr. Lyon differs from the others heretofore described, in the fact that he uses lead, instead of mercnry, as the medium by which to extract the gold from the prepared ore. His process may be described as an assay on an immense scale, and thereby securing the consequent thorough extraction of the bullion from its ores. The lead necessary for the working of dantly found in the vicinity of Black Hawk, at which place his works are located, the lead resulting from the smelting of the galena is cupelled, and whatever silver and gold it may contain thus saved. The litharge or oxidized lead is reserved for use in the smelting furnace, and is the main in-gredient in the process. Mr. Lyon, after crushing, "buddles" his ores, which operation consists in separating, by means of water, the sulphurets from the gangue or wall rock, thus obtaining his ores in a clean condition and free from quartz or earthy impurities. From the buddle, the clean and therefore concentrated ore, passes to the de-ulphurizer, which is a simple reverberatory furnace, the intense heat of which soon 2ddrives, off the contained sulphur, leaving the ore in a condition, whereby the lead has opportunity to at once combine with the 'Sth The desulphurized ore is then mixed with the litharge in proportions ranging as to the amount of bullion it may contain; this mix-ture is then placed in the smelting furnace, the action of the heat first fuses the litharge. the action of the heat first fuses the intrarge, converting the charge into a pasty mass, the carbonacious gases of combustion next re-duce it into metallic lead, which finds its way to the bottom of the furnace, carrying down with it the gold and silver; the re-sulting lead is from time to time withdrawn sulting lead is from time to time withdrawn as it accumulates, the last "charge" carry-ing off the slag, which, floating on the molten lead is reapily removed. This lead, more or less charged with precious metals, is then cupelled, the gold and silver remain-ing, while the litharge is blown off, and saved for use again. According to theory this process is the best, being, in fact, as I have before stated, an immense assay, and, therefore, certain to extract all the precious metals the ore may contain; in practice, it has worked well, and saves the gold to within two per cent. of the assay value. The furnaces are of a capacity to heat four tons of the mixture of litharge and ore, which charges requires about five hours to reduce and perseverance of their builder, who, notwithstanding the many discouragements he received, labored on until the end was reached, and is now reaping golden returns, most certainly deserved. Mr. Lyon was obliged to make his own fire brick, the first of which failed to withstand the intense heat, rendering it necessary, at a great cost, to entirely rebuild the smelting furnaces. Nothing daunted by this failure, Mr. Lyon again began their crection, made other fire-brick which have proved equal to the best made East, and which have for several months withstood the intense heat which i necessary for a thorough reduction of the ore. The process has now been in successful operation for several months, during which time over $40,000 (coin valuation) has been extracted. The last result was a button weighing one hundred and fifty-six (156) pounds, valued at $12,000 in coin. This button is now on exhibition in Denvir, attracting crowds of curious spectators; it will soon be sent East, and your readers may have an opportunity of beholding it. It will be followed by a still larger one, which will prove better than words, the immense wealth Colorado is capable of pouring into the lap of our nation. One result of the success of this process has been the introduction of the system of mill owners buying their ores, similar to the manner in which such matters are arranged in Great Britain. The ore raised in the copper and other mines of that country are sold to the proprietors of the smelting works, who are not directly tracting crowds of curious spectators; it will that country are sold to the proprietors of the smelting works, who are not directly interested in the mining of the same. Mr. Lyon is now buying galena, as well as other ore, thus introducing this system into Colo-rado. That this is the true way of procuring ore there can be little doubt. Of its success, interest but to lock at the immerse smalt we have but to look at the immense smelt-ing works in Swansea, Wales, and in other parts of the United Kingdom. Division of labor must necessarily produce greater profits to all concerned than if one party or one firm were to both mine the one and one firm were to both mine the ore, and treat it after it was raised. When well established and generally carried out, this system will do much towards a more rapid development of our mines, as it will enable all who have "lostels," to work the same and self the ore to advantage, without the ex-pense of secting costly works for its reduc-tion. Those who are prepared to treat ore, and who have mills, will be enabled to do so without being compelled to purchase "lode" property. The great want of Colorado has been and

A number of smelting or other works reat ores to advantage and profit, would, by giving them a market for their ores as fast as raised, enable hundreds who own property of undoubted richness and value, o proceed and develop their property, en-iching themselves and the country at large. As the matter now stands, they are unable to raise a single cord of ore, and are comrelled to see their golden treasure remain undisturbed, for want of the necessary funds undisturbed, for want of the necessary funds wherewith to remove them. The process of Messrs, Crosby & Thomp-on, now being introduced, next demands attention, the peculiarity of whose desul-phyrizer (for all the new processes are but various modes to effect desulphurization), is as follows: The crushed ore is introduced into emplaine or prinder into the shifts in the into revolving cylinders, into which air is drawn by a fan blower, the current of air drawn by a fan blower, the current of air enters a tube, pierced with holes, which passes through the centre of the revolving chamber, the air passes through the small holes, comes into contact with the heated ore, and by the blower above mentioned is drawn off, charged with sulphurous gases and is allowed to escape, after passing through the condensing chambers. Accord-ing to the theory of Mr. Thompson, the ing to the theory of Mr. Thompson, the inventor of the process, gold is volatile at a temperature sufficiently great to desulphu-rize the metallic sulphurets, this condensing chamber is, therefore, designed, by causing the gases to pass through a spray of water, to condense the vapor of gold which other-wise would have escaped. This process has been but recently introduced, and no working results have yet been attained, such as would warrant a decided opinion about its value. At present it can but be said that in theory the process is a good one, and pro-mises well. Several mills, belonging to vari-our Eastern Companies, are being fitted up with machinery according to this plan, and a few months will decide as to its actual merits. There remains yet another process to be described before your readers will have be-come conversant with the principal mode by which it is proposed to extract the gold from our ores. It is that of Mr. Mason. Superbeated steam is the desulphurizing agent which he proposes to use, the ore, in a crude state and unbroken, is charged in a kiln; after it becomes heated, steam is allowed to pass in; on coming into contact with the heated ore it is decomposed, the oxygen thus liberated combines with the sulphur, and the resulting compound, sulphurous acid, passes off as a gas. The after treatment of the prepared ore in both this and in Messrs. Crosby & Thompson's process is by amalgamation, either on the simple shaking tables on in some of the more efficient pans. When your correspondent visited Mr. Mason's mill the process was not working; a lawsuit, as to the right to use steam in the manner he does for the purpose, having stopped all opera-tions, and I was able to see but the silent and motionless machinery. From samples of prepared ore shown me, it was evident that the process has many merits; of its retual working results I am unable to speak. Having finished a review of the more im-portant processes, the next letter will be devoted to a general review of mining operations in the territory, until which time
