Faces on a Battle Field.

The celebrated report of Dr. Chenu on the mortality caused by war contains some interesting information concerning the ap-pearances presented by some who die a vio-lent death on the field of battle. One surgeon says that, wandering over the battle-field of the Alma, on the third day after the fight, he observed with astonishment a number of Russian corpses whose attitude and expression of countenance were those of life. Some did certainly present an aspect which showed that they had suffered severely just previous to dissolution, but these were few in number compared with those who wore a calm and resigned expression, as though they had passed away in the act as though they had passed away in the act of prayer. Others had a smile on their faces, and looked as if they were in the act of speaking; one in particular attracted his special attention; he was lying partly on side, his knees were bent under him, his hands were clasped together and point-ing upward, his head was thrown back and he was apparently still praying—evidently he was in the act of doing so at the moment when death laid his hand upon him.

Another medical man relates that after the battle of Inkerman the faces of many of the dead still wore a smile, while others had a threatening expression. Some lay stretched on their backs as if friendly hands had prepared them for burial. Some were still resting on one knee, their hands grasping their muskets. In some instances the cartridge remained between the teeth, or the musket was held in one hand, and the appealing to Heaven. The faces of all were pale, as though cut in marble. As the wind swept across the battle-field it waved the hair, and gave the bodies such an appearance of life, that a spectator could hardly help thinking they were about to rise to continue the fight.

Another surgeon, describing the appearance of the corpses on the field of Magenta, says that they furnish indubitable Magenta, says that they furnish indubitable proof that man may cease to exist without suffering the least pain. Those struck on the head generally lay with their faces on the ground, their limbs retaining the position they were in at the instant they were struck, and most of those still held their rifles; showing that when a ball entered the brain it causes such a sudden contrac-tion of the muscles that there is not time for the hand to lose its hold of the weapon before death. Another peculiarity observed in the case of those who were wounded in the brain was the suddenness with which they died even when suspected to be out of danger. During the battle of Solferino, a rifleman was wounded in the head by a ball which passed through the skull and buried itself in the brain. His wound was dressed and he was stretched on straw, with his head resting on his knapsack, like his wounded comrades. He retained the use of his faculties, and chatted about his wound, almost with indifference, as he filled his pipe and lay smoking it. Neverfilled his pipe and lay smoking it. Nevertheless, before he finished it, death came upon him, and he was found lying in the same attitude, with his pipe still between his teeth. He had never uttered a cry, or given any sign that he was suffering any pain.

In cases where the ball had entered the heart, nearly the same appearances were presented as in the cases of those who had been struck in the brain; death was what we term instantaneous, but it was not quite so swift as in the former case; there was generally time for a movement in the act of dying. There was a Zouave who had been struck full in the breast; he was lying on his rifle, the bayonet was fixed, and pointing in such a way as showed that he was in the act of charging when struck. His head was uplifted, and his countenance still bore a threatening appearance, as if he had merely stumbled and fallen, and was in the act of rising again. Close by him lay an Austrian foot soldier, with clasped hands and upturned eyes, who had died in the act of praying. Another soldier had fallen dead as he was in the act of fighting; his fists were closed, one arm was in the act Another soldier had

of warding off a blow, and the other was drawn back in the act of striking.

On another battle-field, several French soldiers lay in a line, with their bayonets pointing in the direction of the foe they were advancing against, when a storm of grape mowed them down. On the left bank of the river Tessia, several Austrian officers lay dead. Some of them were remarkable for the noble expression of their faces, the extreme neatness of their dress, and the cleanliness of their persons. Most of them had fair hair, and their countenances bore the stamp of calm resignation. The best oppor-tunity of seeing the aspect of the masses who died on the field was when they lay stretched beside the trenches which were destined to be their final resting-place. So far were their faces from presenting the livid appearance and the expression of despair which painters are in the habit of producing in pictures of the battle-fields, that a spectator could hardly help calling to the burying parties to wait a little before covering them up. They were so like life.

A Flood in a Lead Mine-Miners Impri-soned in a Cave all Night.

[From the Dubuque Herald, March 2d.]

A rather startling incident, especially to the men immediately interested, occurred on Wednesday night at the lead mine of Chapman, Ratcliffe, Peacock & Bunting.
Mr. Peacock, with a miner named Kelly, had during the day been at work in the western part of the mine, seven or eight hundred feet from the shaft. On proceeding toward the shaft at evening and reaching a point about 350 feet from the shaft where the way suddenly descends about fonrteen feet, to the level of the drift, they discovered the drift was full of water. All hope of egress, so far as their own efforts.

hope of egress, so far as their own efforts could go, was cut off.

As they did not appear at home at the usual hour the alarm was given and it was soon found by those outside that a tream of water from the melting snow had descented. water from the melting snow had descended an old shaft at some distance from the one used at present and had flooded the whole length of the old drifts on that range and the space named in this mine.

There was but one thing to do to rescue the men, and that was to remove the water to such an extent that the men could wade in the drift and have a breathing space between the water and the roof. Fortunately in a new shaft, being sunk over the cave where the men were imprisoned, a dril hole had been extended through some thirty feet of rock to the cave. Through this hole communication was soon had with the men and assurance given of the efforts to rescue them. Candles were dropped to them in order that they might not be compelled to spend the night in utter dark-ness. There was really little danger that the water would rise so high as to drown them, for they had access to another cave where they could if necessary ascend over twenty feet above the then level of the

But the rescue depended on reducing the water, when streams in every direction on the surface were pouring into every old shaft and crevice where by force of gravity they could find ingress. To Peacock and Kelly the prospect must have been gloomy enough.

Means of raising water were procured; two sets of men commenced the labor after dark, at two shafts, fand relieved at intervals by other volunteer miners, who worked with a will to rescue their mining friends. This work went on all night, and yesterday morning the water in the drift was found to be so reduced that the men could perhaps wade or swim to the shaft. It was a chilling undertaking. If they failed, they would be obliged to return to the cave and await results. They plunged in not without much fear that the attempt to reach the shaft would be unsuccessful. Fortunately, there would be unsuccessful. Fortunately, there was no spot in the 350 feet where the water was no spot in the 350 feet where the water Lemons, in prime order, for sale by JOS. B was so near the roof as to prevent breathing.

On reaching the bottom of the shaft, they were immediately raised seventy-five feet to the surface, safely rescued from the danger and suspense incident to the most horrible night they ever experienced.

Relief of Refugees and Freedmen. General Sprague, Assistant Commissioner of Freedmen's Affairs for the State of Mis souri and Arkansas, reports to the Commissioner, under date of February 20, 1866, that twenty-thousand four hundred and eightyfour more rations were issued to white re-fugees in the month to January than were issued in the month of December, as the number of refuges requiring assistance had increased one thousand and ninety-one. The number of rations issued to freedmen in January was four thousand one hundred and fifty-four less than the issue in December, the dependent: free people having diminished one hundred and sixty-seven since the close of last year.

He believes that the issue to refugees will have to be further increased, because, in many parts of the districts there was but a scanty supply of food last fall, and this has been exhausted. The poor are without money or means to procure food from a distance, and there seems to be no alternative but to supply the helpless women and chil-dren from the Government commissary stores, or leave them to starve to death The Commissioner, therefore, is placing a liberal construction on the word "refuge and is preventing starvation in all parts of the district. He estimated the number of helpless poor that will be dependent on the Government for support during the next three months will be about 4,000. Two hundred and fifty boxes of clothing have also been distributed among the destitute

THE PRICE OF GAS.—We tender our sympathies to the benighted residents of the principal cities in the North, who are now being much exercised in reference to the poor quality and high price of gas. Here in the "Smoky city," as we are called by our unfortunate brethren who envy our manufacturing thrift and brilliant gas, we can afford to burn it all day, indeed, we regard it a little better and a little cheaper than daylight, and use it accordingly. Seriously, though, we see no good reason why the price of gas in other cities should be so high. Below we append a list of cities with the price paid for gas, per thousand feet in each including the revenue tax of three per cent: St. Louis, hicago,
