EVENING BULLETIN.

SATURDAY, MARCH 17, 1866.

BRITISH "FREE TRADE." The fraudulent character of British "Free Trade" is well exhibited and exposed in the late able report of the Revenue Commission, "Special Report No. 3," p. 81. The Commission there make the following important state-

"The commission would ask attention, in this connection, to evidence taken by them (see the testimony of Mr. John A. Lowell), which seems to establish the fact that within a comparatively recent period the Indian Department of the British government, in direct opposition to what is claimed as the established policy of that nation, with a view to discourage the importation into India of American manufactured cottons, levied and collected upon them heavy discriminating duties. which duties were sufficient, prior to 1866, to almost entirely destroy that portion of the American trade with India, which before that time was large and increasing."

To those who have studied well the history of the British mercantile and colonial system during the past century and a half, this statement will not appear in the slightest degree surprising. It may, however, have a tendency to open the eyes of those who, in their simplicity, have believed in the honesty and sincerity of English writers who have attempted to convince the world that it was to their interest to open their ports to British goods.

No man, the world over, possesses less catholicity of spirit than the Englishman. No man is so utterly incapable of investigating the beautiful and harmonious laws of social science. His reasoning on all economic questions is biased and controlled by his own peculiar interests. His philosophy is mixed up with trade in cotton goods, iron and other commodities. He is ready to condemn and scout all views and measures -of public policy which stand in the way of his enriching himself at the expense of others. All men and all countries are benighted and behind the age that would protect their diversified industry from the assault of British rapacity. All people are liberal and enlightened who are ready to allow the Englishman to do for them what he has done so completely for the poor of India, Ireland, Portugal, Turkey and Jamaica.

The case presented by the Revenue Commission is but the old story of the ox and the bull. Our ox was found to be goring the Englishman's bull in India, and he soon found that his boasted "laws of political economy" were not suitable for India in the matter of cotton cloths. How is it possible for our people any longer to be deceived by this British "Free Trade" fraud?

CORNERS AT THE STOCK BOARD. It is a regular business at the stock board to buy and sell stocks for future delivery, the parties operating basing their views of future prices upon the condition of the money market, value of the property, and the many other circumstances which go to make up market values. These operations, carried on in a legitimate way, are the life of the exchange, and go to make up the profit and loss account of our trading community at the end of the year. But out of them grow those transactions called corners, which have so frequently disgraced the New York exchange, and which some cliques of unscrupulous operators are trying to inaugurate here. The mode of operating is as follows: A party goes quietly round to the holders of a stock, usually selecting one comparatively worthless, and by some inducement make them agree not to sell: they then buy and sell large amounts through appointed parties, paying commissions so as to make the transactions appear legitimate; declare dividends, if they can possibly raise the money; openly prociaim they do not intend a corner; get the stock gradually quoted far above its known value, and by every means in their power throw traders off their guard, and thus induce them to sell for future delivery, or "short" as it is termed in the language of the Exchange. When they find a sufficient amount of these -sales have been made, they call on the parties to deliver, which they know they cannot do themselves, having control of all the shares, and thus fleece those who have money to pay, and compel the poor unfortunates to violate their contracts and break. We want to hold such transactions up to the execration of the community. A highwayman who boldly robs you of your money is an honest man compared to those who practice with low cunning to stab you in the dark. If such transactions do not come under the head of conspiracy and swindling, we do not see the use of law. We are glad to find that they are deprecated by the respectable members of the Board, and that those who engage in them soon lose all caste and confidence. There are several of these cornering operations now being tried at the Stock Board which need ventilation, and we hope Judge Ludlow, or some other magistrate equally disposed to put the full force of the law upon swindlers,

Mr. Banks's Speech. On the 2d and 11th pages of to-day's paper will be found a full verbatim report of the great speech of Hon. Nathaniel P. Banks, on the appropriation for the American department of the Paris Exhibition of 1867. We have been induced to print it, in ad and possess this remarkable and ad-will get a case before him.

BLACK SCHOLARS AND POETS. A recently published work entitled the Prince of Kashna, a West Indiaan story, purports to give the life of a prince who had, by cruel fortune, become a slave in this country. A late reviewer, in speaking of the book, intimates a doubt whether so well-educated a person as the Prince of Kashna has ever been a slave in America, and that the plot, to say the least, is somewhat too fanciful.

The notice in question reminds us that we have in our possession a strip of paper bearing a well-written Arabic sentence, executed by an old slave who was living in Charleston, South Carolina, not many years before the war, and who is possibly yet in existence. The gentleman to whom we are indebted for this curiosity, informed us that the old slave showed him an Arabic manuscript, written in an old account book, the subject of which was his (the slave's) autobiography. He had been a schoolmaster in Africa, singular as it may seem; teachers being, in fact, not much more uncommon in that country than in Tennessee or Mississippi; and was well acquainted according to the ordinary Arabic standard and methods with the elementary principles of algebra and astronomy. His knowledge of Oriental history must have been remarkable, since our informant (himself a gentleman of extensive information and author of a treatise on our Indian dialects,) found that the old man was wel acquainted with the history of Spain during its occupation by the Moors, although he was totally ignorant of anything that had taken place in that country since the downfall of Boabdil El Chico, Arabic being the only language which he could read. It is not impossible that the laws of the South, prohibiting blacks from learning to read, had prevented this "gendeman and scholar" (as all teachers of the Koran are held to be in the East) from acquiring a literary knowledge of English. It may, by the way, interest those who are not at present entirely disgusted with politics, to know that this hindering the negro from learning to read is now being carried on with as much vigor in Mississippi as it was before the war-the latest report of the Freedmen's Bureau for that State showing that there is but one town in the State the council of which sanctions black schools, and only eleven towns altogether in which it has been found possible to establish such schools at all.

Men of genius who were slaves have not been as rare as black swans in this country. Mingo, a Southern slave who was torn to death by bloodhounds, many years ago, was the author of a better poem than Paul Hayne ever wrote. This lyric appeared during the life of the author, in the Boston Journal. 'George,' who belonged to one James Horton, of Chatham county, North Carolina, lived a slave, while his poems were extensively published in the Raleigh Register, and other Southern journals. They subsequently appeared in a collected form, printed by Gales and Son, of Raleigh. Liberty was the great aspiration of the man, but it was never realized. In 1837, when he was forty years old, he was still working as a slave at Chapel Hill, the seat of the University of North Carolina. Two verses set forth the style of this poet: O Liberty! thou golden prize, So often sought by blood! We crave thy sacred sun to rise The gift of Nature's God!

Bid Slavery hide her haggard face, And barbarism fly;
I scorn to see the sad disgrace

In which enslaved, we lie. It is a matter to be regretted that the complexions of these poets and scholars should have been so much deener than the regulation standard of paleness recognized by Bishop Hopkins, and the Methodist and Episcopal churches of the South. For it is quite evident that had they been allowed to acquire an education, or in fact been recognized at all as individuals capable of ranking with white men in intellect, they might have done something towards increasing the extremely attenuated and turbid fountain of what is by courtesy termed the poetry of the South.

Death of an Old Soldier. Col. Robert Carr, a well-known citizen, died on Thursday last, at his residence in the Twenty-fourth Ward. The deceased had attained to the good old age of eightynine years. Colonel Carr was a native of Scotland, and came to this city in the ship Friendship, from Glasgow, in 1784. He subsequently obtained employment in the office of Benjamin Franklin, and served the Printer-Philosopher as an errand boy for some time. He learned the trade of a printer, and in his boyish days he read "proof" with Washington. His recollections of Washington, Franklin and other distinguished men of the time was clear and distinct. In the early part of the present century Colonel Carr entered into the publishing business in a limited way, and several works were published by him. On the breaking out of the war of 1812 he joined the army as a volunteer, and he served under Scott on the Canadian lines. At the time of his death Colonel Carr was the oldest surviving field officer of the war of 1812, from Pennsylvania.

The deceased married the daughter of Mr. Bartram, the proprietor of the wellknown Bartram's garden in West Pniladelphia, and after the death of Mr. Bartram, Col. Carr kept the place open as a public garden for some time. On the occasion of the Bradford bi-centenary, at New York, a few years since, the deceased was present as a delegate from the Pennsylvania Historical Society, and he was treated with much distinction upon the occasion. He was an early member of the Historical Society, and order to gratify a very general desire to of the Typographical Association. He was also an active member of the Pennsylvania able oration, which is worthy of the best | Association of Soldiers of the War of 1812, of Congress. The telegraphic abstract and attended all the meetings regularly. Reing the oldest member, he was always.

called upon to read Washington's Farewell Address or the Declaration of Independence, and cheerfully performed the duty assigned to him. On the 22d of last month he read the Farewell Address before the Associa-

Mrs. Sonthworth's New Work. By an advertisement elsewhere it will be seen that Mrs. E. D. E. N. Southworth's romance entitled "The Fortune Seeker" is published this day. It is one of the most attractive of her novels, the characters being well individualized and the plot being ably and forcibly worked up. There are various exciting improbabilities recorded in the story, such as astounding resemblances, chloroformed and abducted brides, a white female sold into slavery after being made to look like an individual of African descent A portion of the plot is thus given by one of the prominent characters in speaking to the heroine: "What a life, of vicissitudes has yours been! Born an heiress; stolen in your intancy, and subjected to the worst evils of poverty; adopted by a wealthy man; married to a distinguished military officer; torn at night from your bridal chamber carried to sea by pirates; sold as a slave; driven by desperation to the cypress swamp; hunted by bloodhounds; recaptured; subjected to insult; exposed to death; and rescued only at the last moment by an unexpected stroke of Providence." The line taken by the authoress is rather a new one for her, but the book will rank as one of the most powerful of her productions. Published by T. B. Peterson & Brothers of this Great Sale of Earle's Pictures. Mr. B. Scott, Jr., whose frequent sales of pictures at his own rooms have excited much interest, will sell the fine collection of works, by European and American artists, of Messra. James S. Earle & Sons. The sale will take place in the Eastern gallery of the Academy of the Fine Arts, on the evenings of Tuesday and Wednesday, March 27th and March 28th. The entire catalogue will be found on the third page of to-day's paper, so that we need enter into no details here concerning the pictures. But the wellknown taste and enterprise of the Messrs Earle have been shown in the selection, and there are fine examples of some of the best German and French artists, and many of the most approved and popular of our own country. It is rare to have such a sale of really valuable paintings in Philadelphia, and we call the particular attention of connoisseurs and amateurs to the catalogue.

LIFE INSURANCE.-In the statement of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, of New York, in another column, will be found some illustrations of the working of the "Contribution Method" of dividing surplus, originated by this Company. These illustrations will be of value to all who are interested in Life Insurance, as this method has now been adopted by several of the leading companies in this country, and others are considering the question of its adoption.

One thing is certain; life insurance thus becomes not only an easy and safe way of providing for one's family, but also a profitable investment of money, looking merely at the pecuniary gain to the insured himself during his own life. This Company has nearly fifteen millions of dollars, cash assets. In addition to over one million, specially set aside to meet extra losses, should any such occur from a visitation of the cholera during the coming year, it divides among its policy-holders, this year three millions of dollars in cash.

THE SCHOOL OF DESIGN FOR WOMEN.-On our fourth page we print some recent proceedings in the State Senate, in reference to the Philadelphia School of Design for Women, including an address by its principal, Mr. Braidwood. This institution is growing in importance every year. and is exercising a most beneficial influence, in making us independent of foreign countries in designs for paper-hangings, carpets, gas fixtures and scores of other branches of ornamental industry. We hope that the Legislature will be liberal to t in the appropriation bill.

INTERESTING ADDRESS .- On Tuesday evening next the Rev. William Butler, D. D., so long known in connection with the Methodist Missions in India, will deliver an address at the Green street M. E. THE NEW PASSENGER RAILWAY PRO-JECT .- A meeting of the citizens of the southwest portion of the city will be held this evening at 8 o'clock, at West End Hotel. game was drawn by mutual consent. Time, 3 hours 50 minutes.

The second game began on Friday afternoon, Mr. Reichhelm opening an Evans's Gambit. Much fine play was exhibited in this game, which was a beautiful specimen of this celebrated opening.

F. W.

[From To-day's New York Tribune.]

The second game was immediately commenced, and Mr. Reichhelm, having the move, adopted the aggressive opening known as the Evans's Gambit. In the early part of the game, to maintain his attacks, he sacrificed a Knight, and, with the same object, declined a subsequent chance to regain. The assault, which he gained, did not, however, prove compensative for the price paid for it; and, after a lengthened contest, during which the game was reduced to an interesting end-position, Mr. Reich-helm resigned upon the fifty-fifth move. In the blind game, which was immediately be-gun, Mr. Mackenzie again opened with the Ruy Lopez Knight's Game. Mr. Reichhelm made a disastrous mistake by hasty play, in the opening, losing a piece, and no subsequent efforts, although he struggled gailandy, were efficacious to save the game, which he resigned on the thirty-first move. The fourth game will be commenced this afternoon at 2 o'clock.
