WEDNESDAY, MARCH 21, 1866.

THE FALL OF COUZA.

The drollest revolution ever recorded is that which has just taken place in the Danubian Principalities, united under the title of Roumania, by the treaty of Paris of 1856, the union being afterwards sanctioned by Turkey. In January 1859, the electoral assemblies of the two Principalities chose as their sovereign a certain Colonel Alexander John Couza, with the title of Prince Couza, Hospodar of Roumania. He took possession of went smoothly. But he became ambitious, and undertook to play the part of Louis Napoleon. There were gradualencroachments upon the constitutional rights of the people; then usurpation, and finally he imitated his model by a coup d'état on the 14th of May, 1864, refusing to sanction a new electoral law, and dissolving the assembly.

Since that time the Prince has carried things with a very high hand, depriving the people of one right after another, till finally his government became a complete despotism. Among his offensive acts was the repeated arrest and imprisonment of a journalist named Rosetti, who had thus become so entirely ruined in fortune that he was no longer thought dangerous. But the man quietly organized a society of a few hundred civilians and soldiers, who kept their secrets completely, for the Prince had not the slightest suspicion of them. At two o'clock on the morning of the 23d of February, the Hospodar went to bed in the palace. A quarter of an hour afterwards a party of forty or fifty of the conspirators, headed by Gregoire Serrurier and Stau ·Popescu, were admitted by the officer on guard, and proceeded to the bed chamber of the Prince's brother-in-law, Lambrino, who was also in bed. Waking up, he called out to his visitors, "what do you want, you wretches?" Couza, who was in the next room, took the alarm. and tried to barricade his door, but it was kicked open, and his highness appeared in great terror and a night shirt. Serrurier said to him, "we do not want your life; but in the name of the Roumanian people, who named Alexander John Couza sovereign prince of this country, we come to order you to sign your abdication." He signed it without a word, and then dressed himself, being assisted by Serrurier and Popescu. He was then put under guard, as were his ex-ministers at their homes. The princess, his wife, was respectfully conducted to the house of a friend. At daylight Bucharest was occupied by the whole army, except one regiment of Moldavian lancers, of which there were doubts. A proclamation announcing the abdication was issued, and a provisional government was created. The legislative chambers met, the abdication was accepted, and the Count of Flanders, brother of the King of the Belgians, was chosen Hospodar, with the title of Philip I. There was immense joy and enthusiasm among the army and the people at all these proceedings, but not an act of violence or disorder of any

The ex-hospodar was allowed to leave Bucharest without molestation. He accepted the situation without even a protest, and went immediately to Paris. The Count of Flanders, it appears, de-The Count of Flanders, it appears, de-clines the honor offered to him, and the Boumanians and the great Powers are looking about for some other available person, Russia favoring the Duke of Leuchtenberg, who is a Russian prince. But Turkey and some of the other powers object to him, and there is a little bad feeling on the subject. Indeed, there is considerable movement of Russian and Turkish troops on the respective borders, and there are apprehensions of serious difficulty, and perhaps war. But whatever may be the result, this night-shirt abdication of a sovereign prince will make a laughable page in history.

CIVIL RIGHTS.

We are glad to see that the question of the right of all citizens to ride in the street cars of Philadelphia is at last to be tested and settled. In the Court of Nisi Prius a case was presented yesterday for this purpose, a suit being brought by a colored man against the Fifth and Sixth Streets Railway company for ejecting him from their cars. The case was submitted to Judge Thompson by Mr. Gibbons upon several law points, which, with an amicable understanding, the judge declined to decide, thus sending this important question to the proper and final tribunal, the Supreme Court of the State. It is a remarkable thing that such a question as this should be an open one in Philadelphia at this late day. It seems very strange that here, where the humane policy of William Penn has left its impress upon all our institutions and given the general tone to our whole society, this most un-Friendly prejudice against color should have outlived its Philadelphians who care for the honor of their native city are put to the blush whenever they visit New York or Boston, or any other Northern city, by seeing how far ahead of us, in this particular, are all other parts of the country. It was bad enough before the war to allow ourselves to indulge in the narrow prejudices of by-gone days; but now, when these proscribed citizens have proved their loyalty and their manhood on the battle-field, it is humiliating to think that the city which sent ten or twelve full regiments of colored troops to the front should stand alone in a mean and bigoted denial of their most palpable civil rights. We wish this state of things could existence in every other city of the

have been corrected without recourse to law. The good common sense of the people ought to have decided it long ago, as it will now undoubtedly be decided for them. Those who are too strongly wedded to their old prejudices will be comforted with the thought that the law has put its hands, in one way at least, upon our street monopolists. The high degree of unpopularity which our street railroads enjoy will reconcile the most obdurate pro-slavery people to the new order of things. A humorous friend suggested the other day that nothing but the universal odium which attaches to the present mismanagement of the Gas his government, and for a time things | Works had saved Mr. Van Dyke from the natural consequences of his late insolent and ridiculous performance."Not that the people loved Van Dyke more, but that they loved high prices and bad gas less." Upon the same principle the bigotry which would refuse civil rights to a class of our citizens on account of their color will yield to the sense of satisfaction at seeing the "Board of Presidents" compelled to do what they have so long and so stubbornly refused. We want to see Philadelphia at least on a par with her sister cities in the development of broad and liberal views, and the proceedings commenced before Judge Thompson yesterday are a step in this direction.

> SOUTHERN STEAMSHIPS. We call attention to the appeal of the Directors of the Philadelphia and Southern Mail Steamship Company, which is presented in another column of this paper. The amount of subscriptions to the stock is $630,000; but these are on the condition that four lines be established, one to Wilmington, one to Charleston, one to Savennah, and one to New Orleans. To do this properly, the amount should be increased to one million of dollars, and the very clear and candid statement of the Directors gives reasons for this that will be satisfactory to all readers. We therefore hope that our capitalists and business men will at once raise the required amount. They have the ability and we are sure that the investment will prove so advantageous regret it. THE CAMPAIGN LEADER. The National Union party is fortunate in having secured Col. Frank Jordan of Bedford county, as the Chairman of their State Central Committee. Those familiar with party politics know that an election is often jeoparded and sometimes lost by the inefficiency or bad judgment of the person filling this post. There need be no lears of Col. Jordan, however. He has experience, intelligence, energy and thorough devotion to the principles of the party. His selection gives great satisfaction throughout the State, and under his leadership, with General Geary for the candidate, the National Union party will be sure to win a glorious victory in October.
