EVENING BULLETIN.

THURSDAY, MARCH 22, 1866.

DYING FOR MEXICO.

To die for one's country is considered very glorious; but there can be nothing dulce or decorum in dying for another man's country. Nevertheless, there have been soldiers of fortune in all ages. and, in our own times, there have been Hessian and Swiss soldiers ready to fight for pay in any cause, and of course they calculated the chances of dying. At this time there are numbers of French. Austrian and Belgians ready to die for Mexico, but it is not likely that any of them regard the prospect of such a death as very alluring. They cannot see the glory of it. The loss of life at the first invasion of Mexico by the French was heavy in the various engagements. Since then been several deaths of distinguished foreigners in Mexico. M. Langlais, who was sent out from France to try and establish a financial system, died of disease soon after his arrival at the capital. He was a man of rare ability and great distinction, and his death is a real loss to France. He was sacrificed to his master's greed of power.

Belgium is called on to mourn also a very lamentable loss. A special envoy sent to Maximilian by Leopold II, to announce his accession, was shot dead on a diligence, just after leaving the city of Mexico, and one of his suite was badly wounded. This cruel act was done by brigands, who infest the main highway even up to the gates of the capital. The Liberal armies may have wasted away, but there are bands of brigands or guerillas all over the country, and they make war upon all foreigners, and upon all natives who befriend the French or favor Maximilian. If the French had known how many valuable lives were to be sacrificed to fulfil their Emperor's ambitious schemes in Mexico, and if they had known how little benefit to France was to be gained, they would have been likely to have made a good deal more opposition to the expedition than they did. A good many more French, Belgian, and Austrian fives will be lost, before Mexico is pacified.

EUROPEAN TROUBLES.

The political troubles in various parts of Europe are remarkable, exceeding the troubles of the United States. England has the Fenians, Jamaica, New Zealand and the Reform bill. France has her Mexican job, the difficulties of which do not diminish. Spain has new outbreaks similar to that of Prim, and a general uneasy state of feeling among the people. Italy has the Roman question and the brigandage. Belgium is disappointed at the results of the Mexican expedition, and wants to get her own troops back. Greece is in great disorder, and her young Danish king sits very uneasily on his throne. The Danubian principalities have not yet got a sovereign, and before they get one, there is danger of a rupture between Russia and Turkey. Austria is very angry at Prussia about the Duchies, and the Prussian people are in a rage with their king and his minister, Bismark, for their despotic dealings with the Parliament. Sweden and Portugal are the only considerable powers in Europe that have not a trouble or two on hand.

When we survey all these things, we cannot but rejoice that the Union of these States of ours has been preserved. If there had been two, three or more confederacies in this country, there would have been continual difficulties and frequent wars between them, and it would have been necessary to resort to the wretched system of diplomacy and interference among the different powers to keep up a peace, which would after all, have been no peace, but only a forced and unfriendly quiet. One great nation, under one central government, one national constitution and one general system of laws, is essential in a great country. It can never be attained in Europe, and there will constantly be serious difficulties on that continent. We have saved ourselves from the condition of Europe by re-establishing the Union, on a basis that can never be disturbed.

ANOTHER CITY RAILROAD. An effort is making at Harrisburg to incorporate a company to build a passenger railway on Twelfth and Sixteenth streets in this city. There is no necessity for such a road, as the adjacent streets afford ample accommodation for the whole population living on Twelfth and Sixteenth. These two streets, however, are the only ones running North and South by which carriages can be driven in and out of the city without danger of wheels and axles breaking on the rails. If there were any popular demand for the new road, the project would have some merit in it. But there is really none. On the contrary, the people want those two streets free from rails. We trust that they will take measures to prove this by remonstrances and by appeals to the city members. We trust the Legislature will, at least, wait till they ascertain the popular feeling on the subject, before passing the bill.

THE GLACIERS OF SWITZERTAND .- SWITzerland has always possessed an interest for the Eurapean tourist, greater, perhaps, than that of almost any other part of the Continent, because it satisfies such varied tastes The student of history finds places at every step, sacred to the memory of some martyrs to the cause of political or religious liberty; the military man can trace the paths of the greatest captains of ancient and modern times; the merchant finds roads, paths and passes over which traffic of all kinds from the far east to the west of Europe has passed for centuries, and there is over all an aroma of patriotism kept floating by the traditions of Tell and of the heroes of the three cantons, and of faithful devotion to a cause espoused, as typified in the dying lion, cut in the living rock in the pretty garden near Lucerne, a monument to the members of the Swiss guard, who fell victims to their fidelity before the door of Marie Antoinette's apartments in the early days of the French revolution. To the lover of grand natural scenery, is Switzerland especially interesting, since there is no readily accessible locality in the world where the rocks of earth tower so high into the sky, with the natural accompaniaments of perpetual snow and ice.

It will be seen from the advertisements that the last lecture for this season of the course of the Franklin Institute, at the Academy of Music, will de delivered on the 27th of March, by Prof. Fairman Rogers, on the "Glaciers," which are the most wonderful features of the scenery of high mountain regions, and which are doubly interthere have been many deaths from the esting from their external peculiarities as effects of the climate and from guerilla parts of the landscape, and from the curious fighting. Quite recently there have phenomenon connected with their motion which even yet can hardly be considered as having been satisfactorily explained, in all

> We understand that the lecture will be illustrated by colored views, and by enlarged photographs, thrown with the lantern on a screen of the glaciers themselves taken by some of he most eminent phstographers of Switzerland and of Paris.

A Prosperous Insurance Company. We direct the attention of the business community to the statement of "The Home Insurance Company" of New Haven, published in our columns to-day. The progress and growth of the Company have been regular and rapid. It commenced business in November, 1859, with a cash capital of $150,000, which from time to time has been increased, and now amounts, together with the surplus, to over one million two hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars, in addition to which the Company has a steady stream of premiums flowing in, amounting to about $100,000 monthly, thereby giving the ability to meet promptly any losses that may occur. They are pre pared to issue term or perpetual policies, covering all descriptions of property, and we recommend all who have property to insure, to secure a policy in this Company, through the popular and obliging agents, Messrs. Sabine, Duy & Hollinshead, No. 230 Walnut street.
