The Virginia City (Nevada) Enterprise of February 12th contains the particulars of a fearful fight which occurred at Carson City, the capital of that State, the day previous. Tom Peasly was a native of New York, and Mart Barnhart of Indiana.
We publish the particulars below which show it to be as desperate a fight as ever occasion.

The City of Carson was yesterday morn-The City of Carson was yesterday morning, about 2 o'clock, the scene of another fearful tragedy. The participants were Thomas Peasly, a well-known citizen of Virginia, and Mart Barnhart, of Carson, a brother-in-law of Wellington Stewart. Both men were dead half an hour after the affair transpired—the latter dying a few moments after being shot. The trouble was based upon some old difficulty between the parties last winter at the State Senate. We give below the facts in the tragedy as eli-give below the facts in the tragedy as elicited from the testimony.

Edward Ingham, sworn, said: Mr. Peasly and I were playing billiards in the Sazarau Saloon; while playing, Barnhart and two others came in and took a drink; did not notice Barnhart again in the Sazarac; Peasly and mosels were that the Cornels Held and myself went into the Ormsby Hotel to skoke some cigars, with the intention of going to bed afterwards; Peasly sat to the right of the stove and my-self to the left, nearly opposite to him; Messrs. John C. Lewis, Plater, and John A. Benham were sitting around the stove; had been seated but a short time stove; had been seated but a short time when Barnhart and two others came into the Ormsby; they were the same parties that came into the Sazarac; they probably took a drink and went out, but soon returned, taking another drink, for which Barnhart paid; immediately thereafter Barnhart walked around and behind my chair and placed his hand on the chair near the Parally (which I think had hear years). Mr. Peasly, (which I think had been va-cated by Mr. Plater) and said to Mr. Peasly, "Why didn't you fight me last year at the Glenbrook House?" Peasly hesitated a moment and then said, "I don't know, are you always on the fight?"

Barnhart, assuming an erect position, said "Yes," at the same time drawing his revolver and leveled it at the head of Peasly, who moved his head one side very quickly and exclaimed, "You don't want to murder me, do you?" Barnhart appeared to draw his pistol back towards himself and then mispistor back towards nimself and then pointed it at Peasly again and fired. The instant he fired, Peasly arose from his chair and advanced toward Barnhart, when Barnhart fired again; Peasly clasped his arm across his breast, staggered a little and then sprung toward Barnhart, but fell on his street at the same time taking held of knees, at the same time taking hold of Bardhart, who struck him on the head with his pistol as fast as possible; Peasly then rose to his feet, throwing himself against Barnhart, forcing him into a small room behind; Peasly was apparently knocked down just inside the door of the little room; I then saw him rise to his feet in the door, Barnhart having his arm about Peasly's neck, striking rapidly with what I supposed to be his six-shooter.

Peasly then exclaimed: "Don't let him reasily then exclaimed: "Don't let him murder me: what are you doing?" or something of that kind. John C. Lewis then sprang towards them and I think took the handle of the pistol from Barnhart; I stepped up to them, they still being clinched, and said to Barnhart: "That will do—you have shot him through." Peasly at this time staggered back from Barnhart into the bar room, when Barnhart said. into the bar room, when Barhnart said:
"Don't let Peasly shoot me," at the same time stooping and picking up the barrel of his pistol; I took hold of the barrel and he let go of it; at this time or at the time Mr. Lewis and I took hold of the parties, James Moran also took hold of Barnhart; as I retired to the counter, expecting to see Peasly fall, Peasly exclaimed: "My God I am shot inrough and through," and instantly straightened himself up, drew his revolver; then made a movement to-Barnhart, who was stepping back into the door of the room referred to and fired his pistol at Barnhart, who was then in the room; Peasly sprang toward the door, thrust the muzzle of the pistol through the door and again fired; he then forced th door open, stepped inside and fired a third shot; I then walked quickly away from the room in search of Mayor Jones and several other gentlemen: I found them at the Saza rac, and told them hurriedly what had hap-pened, and they and myself returned to the Ormsby House, where I saw Peasly lying on the floor; some one said he was breathon the floor; some one said he was breathing; I then went into the card-room, where I saw Barnhart lying on the floor gasping; I returned to Peasly and opened his shirt; while I was doing so he seemed to revive; he took me by the hand, drew me toward him, put his lips to my ear and whispered, timelar hours and was former and whispered. "Take a horse and go for my brother Andy;" I immediately started for Virginia and obeyed his request; on my return this morning I saw him a corpse.
