FOR SALE. As an addition to art literature, it is not unworthy a place next to the works of Mrs. Tameson, Sound jugdgment, refined taste and extensive reading are displayed throughout the work, and much knowledge of men and things may be derived from it.

Its chief claims to praise must rest upon the delightful descriptions and the artmaxims, original and selected, which, together, fill the greater part of the volume. We had almost wished that there were fewer quotations and more of Miss Brewster's ideas. Still, it is not ungrateful to find those pretty thoughts so pleasantly woven into the tissue of her story. Many of her authorities are, to the general reader, quite recondite, and all of the extracts prove series of the meetings of the friends of Irish national was held last night at Odd Fellows' Hall, in West P ladelphia. District Centre Andrew Wynne presid her intimate acquaintance with the literature of criticism. In drawing upon foreign or ancient authors, she has avoided the affectation of being learned "in the tongues," and favors the reader with the translated quotations, thus obviating that which, in her previous novel,"Compensation," proved a serious drawback to the reader's pleasure. Even here she has, on several occasions, relapsed into the old fault of neglecting her mother English; for if it be allowable to use the French noun console for want of an English equivalent, there can be no doubt that portefeuille is translatable, and that our portfolio is equally as expressive as the daintier French term.

As a story it is less [meritorious. "St. Martin's Summer" confirms an impression made while reading "Compensation," viz, that the author's forte lies rather in the domain of criticism than in the realm of poetic fable or romance writing. / But while we doubt that the power of constructiveness: as applied to narration, is hers to any remarkable degree, we are not the less willing to give her credit for fine powers of analysis. The subtle glance, the nice discernment, which alights upon the central idea of a musical composition and follows it through its tone-development, is evidently hers. Not less is she gifted with that refined taste (which, though inborn, needs like all other gifts the most extensive culture) that is required by one who chooses to apply the results of æsthetic studies in new directions, or without too closely following the guiding steps of the older critics.

Mentenness and a line of Notlingham Lacs Mr. Finit has also opened a line of Notlingham Lacs Curtains, as low as $2.75 per pair. It is this which makes it difficult, and yet easy, to say that which is new upon art.

A MISSIONARY'S ADVENTURE WITH CAN-NIBALS.—An English missionary, who de-scribes life in New Zealand in the last numher of Hours at Home, relates an incident that occurred to him on one of the South Pacific Islands. While on a cruise he touched at a small island for fresh food, fruit toucned at a small island for resh lood, that and vegetables. Of these he obtained a fall supply, and was about leaving, when a chief asked him if he would like some flesh food. Says the missionary: "Thinking that doubtless he had hogs, I said yes. ROBBING A FELLOW-BOARDER.-A young ROBBING A FELLOW-BOARDER.—A young man was charged before ald, Beilter, yesterday after-noon, with robbing Mr. John Brison of sixty-nine dol-lars and fifty cents in money, a sliver watch, vaued at sixty dollars, and avest. The money was contained in a trunk, together with the other articles, at the Frank-lin Hotel, on Market street. The accessed roomed with Mr. Brison, and on Wednesday he left the hotel, Shurtly afterwards the trunk was found to have been border open and robbed. The prisoner was held for a fourther beering. STREET MUSIC,-Pedestrians passing STREET MUSIC,---redestriants passing along Chestnut street, the last day or two have noticed as crippled soldier and a maimed sailor, the latter having had his arms shot off, who have been enter-taining the public with music. The name of the sol-dier is Adolph Hambler and that of the sailor is Bernard Loper. They have b th been in the service of the United States, and, received their terrible wounds in battle. Their musical performances attract a crawd at all times.

Paradoxes may be hatched profusely, bu maxims are not soeasily discovered. Thus even Ruskin is chargeable with many grave errors of judgment, and while we know that he is great as a word painter, we are aware that his theories are not so happy as his stylistic achievements;

In truth, we have, of late, almost dreaded to open a work on criticism. In music this is especially true, so great is the amount of twaddle which has been thrust upon a pliant public.

Does not Hood tell that "Musical enthusiasm is like turtle soup; for every quart of real there are ninety-nine gallons of mock, and calves' heads in proportion!"

Perhaps this should afford us a clue to the muddy style of some of those would-be art critics who have been so industrious in mystifying the old, in order to make it seem as if it were new. Many of them betray a desire to atone for the absence of inspiration by the affectation of it, and this, of course, makes unnatural writing. We need critics who will discourse of pictures and statues and cathedrals and symphonies, with ingenuousness-who will tell us what they have felt and thought, instead of wearying us with senseless imitations of enthusiasm. Thus shall we deem those days as bright ones which shall usher in the Eothens of art-critisism.

In this regard the book before us is clear sensible and instructive. Its descriptions are vivid, the dialogue is easy and natural, and the subject, though old, is one which will never lack interest when treated with the taste and judgment, the lore and learning, which so eminently qualify Miss Brewster for the task she has accomplished. Shall we ever tire of the story of Italy, with her poets and musicians, hersculptures and painters?

Land to memory and to freedom dear. Land of the melting lyre and conquering spear, Land of the vine clad hill and fragmat grove, Of art and arms, of genius and of love."
