BUSINESS NOTICES.

POISON. In these days, the once innocent and salutary pro cess of cating appears to have become a dangerous business. First, we hear of poisonous pork, then the reputation of beef is attacked, and terrible things are proved against yeal. Lastly comes deleterious are proved against veal. Lastly comes deterrious butter, ithough this horror, we believe, is confined to New York, where most of the butter, indeed, resembles poison more than food. But since the days of Hercules, and his fatal shirt, we have heard of no such thing as poisonous Ctothing, and, if there was any such danger, nothing but fair dealing would be appresented by those when purphes at bended by those who purchase at SELLING SHEEP. A German emigrant one day (Sherman that emigrant would say), Gaz'd about Sixth and Chestnut, staring, His garments evidently wearing.

At length, in Teuton ac ent deep,
Said—Dell me vare day'r zelling sheep? We told him of some distant yard,
As yet unvisited by bard,
Where without doubt he could obtain The sneep alive or mutton slain : But here he seized his wornout buttons, And said, "De glose I mean, not muttons." Now, understanding what he meant And why to Sixth and Chestnut sent. We led him gently, but not far, For quickly he espied the "STAR," . And there we left this Teuton cute,

THE VETO. That President Johnson would veto the Civil Rights bill, was well known. The only surprise the delivery of the message could create is that it is not denunciatory and ill tempered. It is somewhat encouraging that it does not declare the course of Congress "revolutionary," as was predicted of it; and it is really comforting that it has not yet been followed up by a mortifying scene like that in front of the White House on the night of the 22d of February.

As for the arguments of the veto, some are reasonable, many are weak. The a case, and has employed a lawyer to help him. He has made up his mind that Congress shall not direct how the freedmen of the South shall be protected and made useful to the country; but that he will manage the business according to his own views. If Congress chooses to come into those views, well and good. But it is an inferior branch of the Government, and so is the Supreme Court. He is the executive, the legislature and the judiciary, rolled into one. He rebukes the legislature for measures passed after careful deliberation, by large majorities, and he pronounces upon their constitutionality, leaving no chance of appeal to the tribunal provided by the constitution to test constitutional ques-

The Government is apparently at a dead lock. The President says nothing that can encourage a belief that he will approve of anything done by Congress, with reference to the South, unless it be according to his dictation. The situation is one to make all true patriots grieve; for while it retards reconstruction, reconciliation and a return to permanent peace and prosperity, it makes traitors and copperheads, north and south, rejoice. It makes our enemies in England and elsewhere happier than they have been since the defeat of our army at Bull Run. If there is anything in this to excite the pride of the President, he is welcome to the feeling. The real friends of Union and liberty have more than ever cause to deplore the death of Abraham Lincoln.

EX-SENATOR STOCKTON. The Copperhead organ in this city makes an attempt to justify Mr. John P. Stockton in the Senate of the United States. It makes two points: first, that forty years ago Doctor Ephraim Bateman, of New Jersey, voted for himself for United States Senator; and second, that the present Speaker of the New Jersey Senate (Hon. James M. Scovel) voted for himself at the recent election in that body. Mr. Scovel did not vote for himself, but he voted for a Democratic candidate, who returned the courtesy by voting for Mr. Scovel, a thing that is constantly done in all deliberative bodies when making choice of officers. But Mr. Scovel would have had a perfect right to vote for himself just as vote for himself forty years ago; but neither precedent has any bearing upon the case of Mr. Stockton. To illustrate our meaning: Several years ago Messrs. William B. Reed and loss to the Government, because there Horn R. Kneass were opposing candi- has been no place to preserve our iron fleet dates for the district attorneyship in properly. We trust that both houses of Philadelphia. Mr. Kneass was returned through fraud, and Mr. Reed contested his election. Mr. Reed would never have thought of making a point of the fact that Mr. Kneass had voted for himself: but if Mr. Kneass had sat in judgment in his own case when the contest | tives in Congress are entitled to great vote in the Court of Common Pless upon which they have set forth its claims.

the question of the legality of the election, we incline to the opinion that Mr. Reed would have raised decided objections to his course. This is precisely Mr. Stockton's case. Had he been a member of the New Jersey Legislature he would have had an undoubted right to vote for himself for Senator; but the case is altered when he attempts to sit in judgment in the trial of his own cause in the Senate of the United States.

THE TIMES OUT OF JOINT. The New York Times of Monday felt itself constrained by circumstances to come to the rescue of the reputation of John Tyler. It did not do so by bluntly attempting to justify the defection of that individual towards the party that elected him; but it endeavored to put the responsibility of the breach between the Whig party and the false Virginian upon the Whigs. The Times said among other things in this connection:

"With John Tyler, after the death of President Harrison, the Whig Party split upon the United States Bank question. Our leaders, with Mr. Clay at their head, were committed and devoted to the Bank, and forced that issue, as they had done in 1832. Tyler, a weak man, was driven into the Democratic party. The result was alike disastrous and inglorious to both Tyler and the Whig party."

At the election for President and Vice President which took place in 1840, the creation of a National Bank, or some sort of a substitute for such an institution, was just as clearly one of the principles of the party that elected General Harrison and John Tyler, as was the tariff or any other plank of the Whig platform. General Harrison died before he had time to shape out or follow any distinct official policy; and in his message to Congress, and at the extra session called by himself in May, 1841, Mr. Tyler, at considerable length, recommended a 'Fiscal Agent," another name for a Bank of the United States.

During the extra session a bill was framed by Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, to meet the views of the President, and with some slight modifications it was about to become a law, when it leaked out that it would not receive the approbation of Mr. Tyler. A second bill was then gotten up so as to overcome the scruples of the accidental chief magistrate, and after passing both Houses of Congress it was sent to the President, who returned it with his veto. But before the veto message was sent in this model President assured the entire Whig delegation in Congress, from Ohio, that if Mr. Ewing's bill were sent to him, he would sign that. This bill was at once revived; but before it could be passed Mr. Tyler recalled his promise to sign it, declaring that at the time he had expressed his approval of it he had not yet read it! Subsequently he sketched off to Messrs. Berrien of the Senate and Mr. Sergeant of the House his plan for a bank. A bill was President has evidently labored to make at once drawn in conformity with this plan; it was privately submitted to the President and his Cabinet, and having met with their approval, it was passed by both houses of Congress withoutamendment. The President also vetoed this bill; his own bill, and all the members of his Cabinet, with the single exception of Mr. Webster, forthwith tendered their resignation. And that is how the Whig leaders forced the bank issue upon Mr. Tyler and drove him into the Democratic party, and how "the Whig party split upon the bank question."

The editor of the Times knows perfeetly well, or he should know perfectly well, that John Tyler was clearly committed to the policy of a national bank in some form, if he intended to be faithful to the party that elected him; the Times also knows, or should know, that his opposition to a bank grew exclusively out of his small jealousy of the illustrious Henry Clay, and that in the littleness of his pigmy soul, he thought he could throw down the idol of a great party, and by the force of official patronage elevate himself upon the coveted pedestal. If this was forcing an issue upon him and driving him into the Democratic party, and "splitting the Whigs upon the bank question," we do not understand "the situation" as it was in 1841, or we are at fault as to the Commonwealth's English in 1866. How well Mr. Tyler succeeded in his experiment was foretold by Mr. John Minor Botts, in his famous "heading off" letter, in which he declared that Tyler would become "an object of execration to both parties." The Times should either post itself better in the history of the last quarter of a century, or mend its political morals, for it certainly proves itself to be in a bad way when it attempts to put upon the Whig organization of 1841 the responsibility of the sins of omission and commission of a man who first betrayed his party, then threw himself into the arms of its adversary, and subsequently died an open traitor to his country.

LEAGUE ISLAND. The House Naval Committee has at length reported in favor of accepting League Island as a site for a great naval depot for the construction and repair of iron-clad ships. It has been recommended by Secretary Welles in each of Doctor Ephraim Bateman had a right to his annual reports, and nothing but sectional jealousy has prevented the consummation of the project heretofore. There has been a dreadful waste of time by committees, which has caused great Congress will act promptly and favorably on the report of the Committee. There cannot be the slightest doubt that League Island is in every respect the best site in the country for the proposed establishment. Our representawas made, and had attempted to cast a credit for the zeal and ability with
