EVENING BULLETIN.

FRIDAY, MARCH 30, 1866.

THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW. The House of Representatives of the State yesterday passed what is known as the eight-hour bill, and that brilliant enactment now only awaits the favorable action of the Senate, and the signature of the Governor, to become a law. The bill was considerably amended before its final passage in the House, and some of the amendments look as though they had been proposed in a spirit of waggishness, or for the purpose of making the measure appear ridiculous, as it really is. The bill, as originally reported, declared eight hours to be a day's labor in all cotton, woolen, silk, paper, bagging, flax and other factories and workshops.

Farmers and farm laborers were excluded from the operation of the bill, while lumbermen were included in its provisions. The conclusion, therefore, is that farmers and farm laborers either have no need of recreation or time for mental culture, or that the securing of crops at harvest time and the feeding of judge of future chances as the President stock when the cattle are hungry, are of more importance than mental culture and healthful recreation are to the farmer. We do not see why the same rule should not apply in some branches of industry that are not excluded from the action of the bill, and if it is right to allow farmers to work as many hours as they please, why not grant the weaver or the foundryman the same privilege? peculiarity of the garment consisted in the many absurdities of the bill was the | tions to separate as they descended, with including of lumbermen among the classes who were to be restricted to eight hours labor a day. These hardy men spend the winter months among the forests of the State, where they fell timber, make it up into rafts when opportunity offers, and await the coming of the spring freshets to float them to a market. When the floods come, every minute of time is precious to them, and they must seize every favorable opportunity to secure the safety and the speedy transit of their property. A large portion of the year they are unemployed and they have more time for recreation than they desire. We can fancy the laugh of derision with which the hardy lumberman would hear of a legislative enactment that would tie up his raft when the day was eight hours spent, and leave him high and dry with his logs, before he had got them half-way to market. To add to the absurdity of the lumberman feature of the bill, these men generally form his motto, with a strong preference for an association for the prosecution of their business. They divide the toils or rather his two points, for a while, and and profits of their enterprise, and any interference with them by such legislative action as that of yesterday is

A motion to include house servants in the bill failed, for the simple reason, we suppose, that Bridget has no vote. This is doing great injustice to the Autocrat of the Kitchen. Biddy is now pretty nearly the complete dictator of the household, enjoying as part of her prerogative the right to snub the lady of the house, derange the domestic economy and squander the means of the family at will. The eight-hour law would have been the ultimate feather in Biddy's cap. She would have been relieved from duty about two P. M., and the lady of the mansion could have tried her hand at practicing housewifery by cooking dinner and supper and attending to the door bell, while the kitchen cabinet was keeping high state at home, or enjoying as impudent as it is silly, itself abroad. We have no patience gravely to discuss this absurd bill. It means nothing because it cannot be put into practical operation, and all who voted for it must know that it is impracticable. It has, however, one serious feature. It was carried through the House as a bid for votes among the working-classes. The community pays large sums of money Jersey, through their Representatives, annually for the purpose of educating | have the right to judge who is a fit man come good citizens and intelligent voters. If such sops as this most foolish of laws can be acceptable to any considerable class of the voting population, it may well be questioned whether our system of common schools is accomplishing all that was expected of it.

PREVENTION AND CURE. It is a singular feature in Mr. Johnson's labored argument against the Civil Rights Bill, that he, no less than three times, admits the right of Congress to pass such a bill. He first asserts that: "Slavery has been abolished, nor is it likely there will be, any attempt to renew it by the people or the States. If, however, any such an attempt should be made, it will become the duty of the General Government to ex-the great law of freedom." Later in the documenthe says: "The general statutes regulating the land and naval forces of the United States, the militia and the execution of the laws, are believed to be adequate for every emergency which can occur in time of peace. If it should prove otherwise, Congress can at any time amend those laws in such a manner as, while subserving the public welfare, not to jeopardize the rights, interests and liberties of the people." And still again he adds: "I therefore fully recognize the obligation to protect and defend that class of our people whenever and wherever it shall become necessary and to the full extent compatible with the Constitution of the United States."

In the passages above quoted, the President advocates the bad principle that cure is better than prevention, in opposition to the contrary and better principle of Congress that prevention is better than cure. Congress seeks to prevent wrong and injustice to a feeble race, while Mr. Johnson prefers to wait until the wrong has been done, and then to trust to whoever may chance to be in power to punish it. Between two such alternatives, the people of this country will not hesitate to choose. Congress has done nobly in seeking to secure to the lately emancipated race, as well as to the oppressed white class at the South, the fullest advantages which result from the victory of the Union arms over the forces of the Rebellion. They seek to lock the door safely before the steed is stolen, and not to wait until the interests and liberties of those who need their succor and encouragement have been jeopardized or destroyed by those who have so long been accustomed to rule over them. Mr. Johnson, apparently without intending it, concedes the whole position to Congress, when he confesses the possibility of a future need for its interposition in behalf of these people. If the need does not arise,—and Congress is certainly as good a judge of future chances as the President—the bill will be inoperative and can do no harm. It it does arise, the wisdom

Thomas Cochran, Auditor.

Aud the steed is stolen, and not to wait until no harm. It it does arise, the wisdom of Congress, in providing the remedy in advance, will be abundantly vindicated. CLAW-HAMMER PATTERNS. There used to be, out West, a particular cut for a swallow-tailed coat, known as the "Claw-hammer Pattern." The But perhaps the greatest absurdity of a tendency of the two caudal terminaan ungraceful curve inward, which would have been the death of Brummel at first sight. It was awkward, ugly and very unbecoming, and could only have been introduced with the earliest pioneers in the march of that wing of civilization which appertains to the adorning of the outward man. There is a well-founded tradition that when President Johnson practiced the sartorial profession in Tennessee he unfortunately adopted this particular pattern. His customers did not like it; their wives scolded at its ugliness; their sweet-hearts poked fun at its awkwardness; their neighbors, arrayed in neat-fitting garments, scoffed and jested at them. but Andrew was inflexible. The "Claws hammer" was his chosen pattern, and this modern Procrustes insisted upon its adoption by his patrons, because he liked it. Old or young, short or tall, fat or lean, straight or crooked, all were alike to him. "Claw-hammer or death!" was "Claw-hammer," He carried his point, then his customers rebelled and went to his rival in trade, who believed that swayne's there were other opinions in matters of | Swayne's taste beside his own. We understand | Swayne's that the Johnson "Claw-hammer" coat is still extant in Tennessee, probably because neither the original victims of the obstinate artist nor their sons, nor their sons's sons, could ever summon up courage enough to wear the coat out. We cannot help feeling that, when Mr. Johnson sets up his personal opinions so strongly against the well-defined views of the ablest men of his own party in both Houses of Congress, his veto messages are being built on the old "Claw-hammer" pattern. If we are right in our interpretation, we think that there may be a most salutary lesson derived from the old garments that are hanging up, dusty, moth-eaten and forgotten, in the garrets of his old neighbors, because he set up his own will as a law for their consciences and tastes.

NEW JERSEY. The eyes of all true loyal men are turned towards the New Jersey Legislature, in the expectation that a United States Senator of the right kind will be elected promptly to fill the place vacated by Mr. Stockton. We have no personal preferences, and the Republicans of New all classes and thus fitting them to be- to represent them and the great principles on which the election of last fall was carried. We trust that no personal aspirations or personal jealousies will be permitted to embarrass or delay the action of the majority in the Legislature.
