Interesting Reminiscences. A writer in the New York Evening Post speaks of St. Stephen's Church in that city

"Tender memories of other years induced me a short time ago to visit this church, which is destined so soon to lose its distinctive character as one of the Christian land-marks of old New York. I was informed through the newspapers that the church property was soon to he sold, and that the mortal remains of those who slept in the adjoining graveyard were to be removed to another place of sepulture.

I can just remember the venerable Dr. Mocre, the second rector of the church, who was subsequently elected to the Bishopric of Virginia. Dr. Moore's successor was the late Rev. Henry J. Feltus, D. D. He was a gentleman of the old school, possessing great beauty of person as well as benevolence of character, and was perhaps more closely identified with the history of St. Stephen's Church than any other one of its rectors, if we except Rev. Dr. Price, the present incumbent.

During the rectorship of Dr. Feltus the church retained its ancient interior arrangements. The pulpit and rector's reading desk were in front of and outside the railing of the altar; and just under the read-ing desk was a smaller one for the use of the precentor, who at that time gaye out the psalms and hymns. Over the pulpit was a sounding board, and this was surmounted by a gilt statue of St. Stephen, the martyr, in honor of whom the church was named, The saint was in a kneeling posture, as the scriptures represent him to have been when his persecutors stoned him to have been when his persecutors stoned him to death. On the keystone of the large arch, just over the altar, was the following apprepriate in-scription in gilt letters: "And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus receive my spirit. And he kneeled down and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this, he fell asleep."

In the extreme rear of the altar, against the wall, there was also in the olden time an ornamental entablature of wood, on which were inscribed in gilt letters the Creed, the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments. Around the railing of the altar and in front of the entablature it was Dr. Feltus's occasional custom to catechise the resiless youngsters of the parish, at the close of the Sunday afternoon service. But long ago these old churchheld gods—the image of St. Stephen, his dying prayer, the Pater Noster, the Decalogue and the Creed—were removed to make place for the more modern coolesiclogical arrangements. modern ecclesiological arrangements; or, as some contend, for the most ancient of all, now revived and adapted to the views of the Moderns. Many years, too, have passed since the attractive Feltus was translated, as we trust, from the Church militant to the Church triumphant; and his mortal remains church triumphant; and his mortal remains now repose underneath that altar where, during his lifetime, he so frequently performed his official duties. A monumental tablet on the south wall, over against the altar, commemorates his Christian character, while another, on the opposite side, re-cords the worth and virtues of his wife

Dr. Feltus was succeeded in the rectorship by the late Rev. Dr. Anthon, whose praise as a concise and vigorous preacher is in all the churches. Then followed Rev. Dr. Hawks, who had just become a celebrity; and during his brief ministry at St. Stephen's the church was always crowded to its utmost capacity. When Dr. Hawks re-moved to St. Thomas's Church, of this city. a clergyman of singular Christian zeal and piety, became for a few years the rector of St. Stephen's. He was more beloved for his apostolical character than celebrated as a preacher; but he, too, has long since gone to his reward. It is now some twenty-eight or twenty-nine years since Rev. Dr. Price was elected to the rectorship of this ancient parish. He has been deservedly popular as a preacher, and for many years drew around him a large and attached congregation. But the tide of population setting strongly up town has left St. Stephen's Church in the condition of nearly all the down-town churches; that is, with but a moderate attendance, and hence the necessity for sale of the property and removal.

It was a week day on which I visited the church, and as I wandered through the aisles and around the altar, standing for a moment on the probable spot where fifty-four years ago I was baptized by the ven-erable Bishop Moore, my day dreams and reveries within these old and consecrated walls were exclusively of the past. I sat in the pew and in the very spot where, over half a century ago, I sat with beloved parents. Here, under this monument erected to his memory, in the south wall, once sat the exemplary George Warner, exemplaints by Chuschward Reits. eemed alike by Churchman and Puritan, by Papist and Protestant. In this square pew sat the Haws family, to which belonged our late City Comptroller, Robert T. Haws, and in an adjacent vault he lies entombed, together with his parents and two brothers, one of whom, the late J. H. Hobart Haws, was my ancient schoolmate.

Not far from my father's pew sat one who was a character of the times; the late Nathaniel Schultz, for many years Auditor in the New York Custom House. He was a Prussian by birth, a gentleman in his bearing, and by education a musician, and withal a bachelor. He wore high white top boots; nearly always carried an umbrella, without regard to the state of the weather; and carried in his capacious coat pocket a huge bandanna handkerchief, as also one of white linen cambric. He was accustomed at intervals, even in church time, to open a small rosewood box of very curious constructiou. This box contained some remarkably fragrant substance, which diffused its aromatic odor for pews round, rousing and animating an occasional sleepy occupant to a fresh appreciation of the service of the sermon. Mr. Schultz was a gentleman of the most scrupulous integrity, as his record at the Custom House will show, but he too has long since passed from this earthly scene of action.

My memories of St. Stephen's date far back, as the reader will perceive, but the church has its more recent and subsequent history, as interesting undoubtedly as that of its early days.

The human remains in the churchyard adjoining the edifice are in course of removal, and the work is done with all respect and decorum. It seems that over ninete and decorum. It seems that over inneteen hundred persons have been interred in the yard according to the records, and some have probably been buried there whose names were never entered.

INCORRIGIBLE STILL.-Charles Faxon, well-known in this section as one of the editers of the Rebel, while it was published at Selma, whose insuppressible wagger, and hopelessly homely phiz are yet remembered in this section by those who were so fortunately constituted as to be able to look upon his teatures while they list not be ableded. to look upon his features while they listene i to the "wit and wisdom" which burst up from the depths of an honest heart and from the depths of an honest neart and poured forth in an endless stream, is now the leading editor of the Louisville Courier; and the following is not among the worst things to which he has treated the readers of that best of newspapers, except the News and Mississippian: "A writer in the Journal of yesterday, in a letter from Lebanon, Kentucky, says that the editor of the Couvier 'has been guilty of treason,' and 'owns his life through the clemency of the Government. This is a mistake. We own our life—first, through the favor of God; second, to a remarkable exemption from all epidemic infections and contagious diseases: third, to regular and abstemious habits; fourth, to a clear conscience; sixth, to the fact that we did not happen to get in the route of a bullet or a cannon ball during the war; and, 'finally, but not exhaustively,' for the reason that we have not heretofore died. The 'clemency' of which the correspondent speaks, we sup pose, was exercised because of our extraor-dinary merits and enterprise. Believing that republican government was a good thing, we endeavored to make two out of one, under the impression that the more of a good thing the better. We failed, but the Government thought it but justice to give us a certificate of the fact that we did make the effort."—News and Mississippi, 22d inst.
