EVENING BULLETIN. MONDAY, APRIL 16, 1866.

TAXATION.

All good citizens are willing to bear their shares of the heavy taxation that has been made necessary by the war debt of the national government. But there are many defects in the revenue law, which make it oppressive to individuals and greatly injurious to different branches of industry. The Board of Trade of Philadelphia have prepared a memorial to Congress on this subject, which we hope and believe will be considered as it deserve to be.

The chief general defect of the law is that it taxes manufactured articles in various stages of the production, and then there is an additional final tax upon the articles themselves. To avoid this accumulation of taxes upon the same article is the object aimed at by the Board. They do not desire the free list extended. They ask Congress to amend the law taxing industrial products as follows:

First.—To levy an adv alorem tax upon all products of industry, (except the special articles and food in the hands of original articles and food in the hands of original producers,) of a uniform per centage, upon the value when sold to the final consumer, as indicated by the gross sales thereof, whether for cash or credit,

Second.—That the same per centage be levied upon each progressive producer upon his gross sales, deducting the amount of tax which shall have accrued in previous stages of manufacture, as indicated by his purchases of excisable articles, (not food in first hands, or special articles,) to the end that each producer shall pay his share of the aggregate taxes, being the amount due upon the increased value which he may have added thereto.

Third.—That no tax be levied upon any

We trust that the members of Congress will consider the points made by the memorial and procure amendments to the bill to be reported in accordance with

THE DETECTION OF MURDERERS. The pursuit and detection of criminals has been reduced to such a complete science, that the chances of committing any great crime with impunity have been reduced almost to an impossibility. The moment that a murder or other crime is made known, a system of machinery is set at work, so well organized and so thoroughly ramified that he must be a master of cunning and sagacity who can successfully elude the pursuit. The capture of Probst, alias Ganther, within about twenty-four hours after the discovery of his horrible crime, is a striking illustration of the working of our police system. There was not a private of the whole police force who had not received the most accurate description of the murderer that could be obtained, and it speaks well for the officers who made the arrest, that they were sufficiently on the alert, to detect their man at so late an hour as eight o'clock. Whether Probsthad an accomplice or not, is not yet positively determined. There appear to be strong evidences that his story, implicating another man, is a false one. If his statement be true, there can be little doubt that he too will soon be in the hands of justice.

We are reminded by this event of another recent murder about which there hangs a singular mystery. We refer to the case of Dr. Levering, who was shot and killed in Montgomery county, a few months ago, within a few feet of his own house. The murder was discovered almost immediately, and the alarm given. The neighbors of the murdered man offered a large reward for the arrest of the assassin, and for a short time there seemed to be the most active and keen investigation of the case by the police. The public confidently looked for the speedy detection and conviction of the criminal, but they looked in vain. For some reason, not yet satisfactorily explained, the pursuit of Dr. Levering's murderer appears to have been dropped, and the whole matter allowed to pass by, unnoticed by the ministers of justice. Whatever may have been the reason for the abandonment of this case, it cannot have been a good one. There cannot be a crime committed in a community, without the community at once becoming, in an important sense, a party interested in its detection and punishment, and any consideration which is allowed to conflict with this principle is unworthy of the slightest respect. We call the attention of our police authorithies again to this case. They have just given an excellent proof of their ability and efficiency, in the prompt arrest of Probst. Let us have the murderer of Dr. Levering brought to justice next.

THE CENTRAL HIGH SCHOOL.

There have been many things written and said about the defects of the Central High School of this city, but no practical system of reform has been presented that has been approved. There is, in the meantime, growing dissatisfaction in the institution and out of it, and its usefulness is constantly diminishing. A complete reform in the management of it should be effected, and the best way to begin this is to put at its head a man of ability, who has not been identified with any of the controversies concerning it. and who could, therefore, go into it without prejudice or partisan feeling.

There are hundreds of distinguished officers of the army who have been thoroughly educated, and many of whom have had experience as teachers at West Point, who would be willing to take situations as heads of educational establishments, now that the army pay is so inadequate to the support of most of them. Let the Board of Controllers look about them for some such person, and when they find one with the proper qualifications, let them offer him a liberal salary and give him authority to reorganize the High School. In this way all old feuds may be wiped out, and the citizens, who are taxed to support the institution, may see it restored to a condition of which they may be proud.

THE DEERING FUNERAL. The crowds which thronged the streets on Saturday afternoon, to witness the funeral of the victims of the late shocking tragedy in the First Ward, attested the profound impression which the event has made upon the public mind. We have never seen anything like it in the case of the death of any private citizen, and only very rarely has the excitement been equalled, even in the case of distinguished public characters. We do not know, positively, who was responsible for the mode in which this funeral was conducted, and do not care toknow. That it was managed with the worst possible taste, and made to pander to the mere coarse curiosity of the ignorant and idle, every one with the slightest sense of refinement will admit. The mangled remains, from which life had been extinct for more than a week, were displayed at the undertaker's house for four or five hours, tickets for the revolting exhibition being issued by the undertaker. A crowd of people of all ages and conditions, of both sexes, struggled and scrambled with the police for admission to the sickening sight. Women forced the aggregate taxes, being the amount due upon the increased value which he may have added thereto.

Third.—That no tax be levied upon any product until the same shall have been sold.

These propositions are reasonable and sound. If they are acted upon, the people will be greatly relieved, industry of all kinds will be promoted and protected, and the revenue will not be diminished.

The aggregate taxes, being the amount due upon the increased value which he may through the mob, dragging small children with them, to give them a taste of the same morbid love of the horrible, which they took such pains to indulge in themselves. The whole scene, devoid, as it of course was, of every trace of that solemnity which might be supposed to belong to the closting scenes of such an awful tragedy, was plants and the revenue will not be diminished.

degrading and revolting in the extreme. Even after this act in the drama was concluded, the effort at notoriety and display had not expended itself. Instead of conveying these poor, disfigured remnants of mortality quietly and directly to their last resting-place, a long, circuitous route was laid out for the funeral procession, over which it passed, on its way to the cemetery. Everything seems to have been contrived to increase the public excitement, and to minister to a depraved taste, and we should have been glad if the police authorities could have seen their way clear to prevent, instead of being called on to promote, this unseemly and objectionable exhibition.
