Thomas Carlyle at Edinburgh. [From the N. Y. World.)

The Scotch universities have a practice of electing annually, by a majority vote of all the members, an honorary officer called the Lord Rector. The office, like that of Chancellor in the great universities of England, requires no duties either of supervision or instruction. All that is expected of the Lord Rector is, that he will acknowledge the compliment by the delivery of a public address. The students of Edinburgh selected, this year, as their Lord Rector, Thomas Carlyle: a choice which might have seemed about as hopeful as the attempt by the small Amerihopeful as the attempt by the small Ameri-can college to dub Henry Ward Beecher, Doctor of Divinity. One would have natu-rally supposed that this great gnarled wri-ter, who with the strength of the oak has all its nodosities, would have contempt-uously declined to accept an empty office and make a show oration. This huge denouncer of shams, whose pet amusement is to pour forth grotesque scorn against stump oratory and all forms of speech that are kindred to it, whose favorite inculcation is the supreme value of Silence-who could have expected that this huge rhinoceros of litera-ture could be tickled by a compliment, and would consent to descerate "the Eternal Silences" by making a speech of mere form? But nobody familiar with Carlyle's writiugs could ever have doubted that this colossal old growler had a heart susceptible of all amiable human emotions; and among others vanity. We have found even his prodigious talent for scolding amiable, for the grinning oddity of its method shows that it is rather an appeal to admiration for a thing well executed, than the outpouring of a mis-anthropic heart. Malignant contempt o men does not solicit their applause by such a studied mingling of the artistic and the grotesque. The amiable wish to stand well with his kind, which has prompted Carlyle to set quaintly constructed admiration-traps everywhere in his writings, made it morally impossible for him to decline the invitatio of the ingenuous Edinburgh students. Con-sidering what Carlyle has been writing al his life about the supreme importance o Doing, and the ineffable silliness of Saying he felt compelled to affect reluctance, and t invent for himself an excuse for accepting the profered honor. Although he had known, for at least fifty years, that the Lord Rectorship required nothing to be done; that it was a mere form, one of the detested Shams or "Simulacrums" he has been cudgeling, with his Hercules club, all his life, he pretends, or makes a semblance of pretending, in the beginning of his ad-dress, that he thought it an office weighted with duties. He says: "When this office was first proposed to me, some of you know that I was not very ambitious to accept it at first. I was taught to believe that there were certain more or less important duties which would lie in my power. This, I confess was my chief motive in going into it—at least, in reconciling the objections I felt for such things; for if I can do anything to honor you and my dear old Alma Mater, why should I not do so? [Loud cheers.] Well but on practically looking into the matter when the office actually came into my hands, I find it grows more and more un-certain and abstruse to me whether there is much real duty that I can do at all." One needs to be somewhat conversant with the writings of Carlyle to appreciate the amiably awkward hypocrisy of this apology for acceptance. It is a pleasant satire on the whole body of Carlyle's writings. The great thing he never tires of in-sisting on is Fact as opposed to Shams, Sincerity as opposed to Pretence, and here he affects to have believed, previous to acceptance, that the Lord Rectorship had duties, and to have discovered only, since ac-ceptance, that it is very doubtful whether it is any; justifying his entering on a thing whose sole function is Palaver by the feigned supposition of Work. Carlyle felt that it would be a satire on himself to compose an elaborate oration for such a show occasion. Finding, as he says, when he began to write, that he was accustomed to write speeches, and that he

Churches of West Philadelphia---"As bury" Methodist Episcopal Church. Among the early churches of the western portion of the city, the "Asbury Methodist Episcopal Church" stands pre-eminent for the amount of good it has achieved. It was the first of that particular persuasion established in that locality, and was founded as early as the year 1827, in what was then called "Chester Circuit," in "Blockley township," now West Philadelphia. Some, and indeed all, of its records are very interesting. In the year we have named the Rev. Jacob Gruber was the preacher in charge of the "Chester Circuit," assisted by the Rev. William Cooper, then a very young man, but giving great promise of the excellence he afterwards attained. Under these gifted ministers the very first class was formed, and it met in an old school house at the corner of Thirty-third and Oak streets, almost in the rear of the present substantial edifice. The first members of this class were John L. Nutt and wife, R. W. Arthur and wife, and William Mullen and wife, and wife, and William Mullen and wife, whose names and memorials are still green in the recollections of Asbury's older members. Thus was or-ganized the first Methodist Church in that part of Philadelphia county. The next year, 1828, the Rev. Eliphalet Reed and Rev. Thomas Miller were sent to take pas-toral charge of this new department of the work; and the little church grew up and became strong under the laborions miniswork; and the little church grew up and became strong under the laborions minis-tration of these faithful men. In the spring of 1829, this church was set apart as a sepa-rate charge, and the Rev. John Nicholson, the provide the set of the set of the set of the terminant set of the se "of precious memory," was appointed the pastor. In this year the first church edifice was built, near the same spot where the school-house had stood. Hitherto it had een without a name; but It was now called "Asbury," in honor of the first American Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church. According to the records very many hun-dreds of converts were added to this flock during the thirty-nine years of its history worshiping with no ordinary devotion at ts altars.

The Asbury is looked upon by the faith-ful with eyes of exceeding great veneration, and deservedly so, for, from its prolific bosom no less than five additional churches have sprung into existence. Truly, the Lord looked down upon the little band of bord housed down upon the little band of original founders, and blessed the work of their hands. The "Haddington," "Heston-ville," "Thirty-eighth Street," "Centen-nial," and "Haverford Street" Methodist Episcopal Churches, are all the offspring of the Asbury, all of which are in a highly fourishing condition under the appearing flourishing condition, under the supervision of separate ministers, who are claimed to be successful ambassadors of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

The present neat and plain building, in which the members of this now very large flock now worship, is still located on the original lot of ground, on Chestnut street, west of the Darby road, near Thirty-third west of the Darby road, near Thirty-third street, where it is a noticeable object, was erected in the year 1850, under the super-vision of the Rev. John Ruth, who is now the chaplain of the Eastern Penitentiary, who is described in its records, as "a chris-tian gentleman, and faithful christian min-ister"

After this church had enjoyed the teachings of very many of the most efficient ser-vants of God, it is somewhat remarkable that it should have just closed a very pros-perous conference, under the ministrations of the same Rev. William Cooper, now a Doctor of Divinity, who, as has been seen, was the youthful colleague of the late Rev. Jacob Gruber, in the foundation of the church, and "is now," writes our informant, the Rev. Francis Pierson, to whom we acknowledge our indebtedness for valuable notes, " is now the mature and able minnotes, "is now the mature and able min-ister of the unsearchable riches of Christ," in whose service he has labored for more than forty years. Truly a faithful servant

away," and concluded to trust to the inspiration of the occasion and speak what came uppermost. By more elaborate pre-paration he would have given an abler address; but all who feel an interest in the man will be better suited with it as it is We have other materials enough for appreciating his great capacity as a writer, and it is interesting to see in what direction his mind turns, when acting on its impromptu impulses. There is very little in the address which is not contained in or easily deducible from, his writings. He recurs to his favorite topics—the superiority of Action to Speech; of Fact to Sham; of Heroes to the Rabble: and especially of past ages to the present in all the deeper elements of character.

What so great a writer as Carlyle has insisted on for a lifetime with vehement per tinacity, challenges the profound examina tion of the age he addressed. The man, o course, has some meaning; and though his view may be one-sided, his unremitted protests against the shallowness, the hollow ness, the superficial babblement and empty articiality of a period which has added more to our knowledge of external nature and to the physical conveniences of life than all the ages which have preceded it, may be conceived to rest upon some great and neglected truth.

So far as we have been able to satisfy our selves respecting the truth which underlies Carlyle's very objurgatory writings, the evil of which he complains is the natural effect of the mental dissipation which attends the multiplicity of our knowledge. We do not recollect that Carlyle anywhere gives it this pedigree; but nothing can be truer than that endless fitting from object, under the stimulus of curiosity or love of variety, is the worst possible regimen either for the intellect or for the heart. There can be no depth of conviction nor earnest ness of feeling, nor much strength of purpose, and consequently no great-ness of character, if the mind is al-lowed to turn vagrant. For developing the affections, better two or three steady friends than a thousand transient acquaintances. For nurturing the intellect, better habitual meditations on a few great truth han a eursory skimming of all the sciences in the encyclopedia. In this age the facil-ties for locomotion and intercourse, the multiplication of new books, and the rapid diffusion of intelligence, are attended with this drawback, that they keep the mind so par-petually on the alert in flitting from one thing to another, that its energies are exhausted in the pursuit of seducing novelties and neither it nor the heart grows to the robustness of the more vigorous elder ages. We are restless and feverish, but not strong. A tree that is transplanted twenty times in a year, though every time into soil of miraculous fertility, must needs be a puny, scrawny thing, while the oak which is rooted in the scanty earth of a rock-ribbed hill grows into storm-defying robustness. We will not go at large into this topic; we will not even touch the question of reme-dies; but this is what we are able to discover of solid ground-work for the habitual railings of Carlyle against this degenerate age. In a more appropriate vehicle than a newspaper, it would be worth extended discussion.

A LARGE procession of the negro population of Hampton and the surronding country took place on the 19th, in honor of the passage of the Civil Rights bill. The proces-sion, after moving through the streets of sion, after moving through the streets of Hampton and Slabtown, proceeded to an open lot of ground near the former place, where the stage for the speakers was erected. Speeches were delivered by Major-General Miles, Brigadier-General Armstrong, Col. D. B. White, and others. Everything D. B. White, and others. Everything passed off quietly, and in great contrast with the riotous demonstrations in Norfolk.

minister, the son of the "lamented Jos. Lybrand, whose praise is in all the churches." A beautiful and capacious cemetery surrounds the church, in which slumber a number of the faithful who have worshiped within its walls—a slumber that knoweth no awakening until the last trump shall sound! "After life's fitful fever they sleep well." Н. В. Н.
