SOUTHERN RIGHTS.

4 While the war was still in progress and when we began to see the light of victory and peace dawning through the clouds of the rebellion, all minds were anxiously directed towards the new and untried future of our country. The complicated question of reconstruction taxed the powers of our wisest and best men to the uttermost, and Congress met nearly five months ago to find this vital subject awaiting a solution. The individual policy of the President, which consists in cutting the ordian knot by a wholesale and immediate restoration o the rebel States to their former position in the Union, was fraught with danger and difficulty, and Congress determined to proceed with that deliberation and caution which the magnitude of the case demanded. Those who have clamored against Congress for doing nothing, do so either from a want of proper reflection or from a love of fault-finding. The questions with which Congress has had to deal have been as new as they have been vast and difficult. There were no precedents upon which to found a policy; nothing, in reality, but the simple, cardinal, radical elements of truth and justice, and the instinct of self-preservation from, which to evolve a permanently reconstructed Union.

The diversity of the human mind, the free scope of debate, the wide field to be examined, the conflict of interests, all combine to demand time for the readjustment of the dislocated members of the Union into healthy and harmonious relations, and time is beginning to vindicate its efficacy for this work. Out of the tangled web of diverse opinions, plans and policies, we begin to see certain well-defined principles being laid down, which the country at large will be able to grasp and understand, and which will form the foundation of the managed, as gunpowder. Upon the grand work of Reconstruction. One of the foremost of these is the proposition nounce the stuff as an unmitigated that the rebels have no rights under curse, and demand not only its prohibithe Constitution, except as they shall be tion as an article of commerce, but the restored to them by Congress. By their absolute prohibition of its manufacture own voluntary act they renounced and use. We think that both Professor every duty that they owed to their Nobel and the wholesale denouncers are the complement of those duties. Nothing has so retarded reconstruction as the arrogant assumption on the part of leading rebels, such as Stephens for instance, that in laying down their arms, they were necessarily invested with all their forfeited privileges. The tone and attitude of the rebels generally would almost lead us to suppose that they had been merely playing at rebellion; that they looked upon the grim horrors of the war purely in a Pickwickian sense, and that they were rather entitled to credit than otherwise, for holding out as long as they did, and inflicting all the damage and loss and distress upon us that they could. We speak now chiefly of the leaders and the politicians. A large portion of the common people are utterly crushed and submissive. The burdens and sorrows of the rebellion fell upon them, and they would probably, if rightly guided, accept the results of their rebellion in good faith. But we must remember that these same classes did not desire secession or rebellion at the beginning. They permitted themselves to be swept into the vortex by the craft of cunning demagogues and reckless politicians, and they show no disposition as yet to change their leaders or to rid themselves of the risk of a repetition of the catastrophe that has fallen upon them.

The North counted the war from the very outset as a terrible reality. Every dollar of treasure and every drop of blood was given cheerfully, but at the same time with a full consciousness of the great sacrifices that were being made for the country's salvation. No lower motive would have enabled us to stand the fearful drain through those four sad years. The end was gained, the cause of the Union was victorious and now, as the North counts the cost at which the life of the nation has been saved, it finds the would-be assassins of Liberty and Union, standing with hastily-washed hands, Constitution in hand, demanding "their rights!" We are glad that we have reached that period where Congress begins to tell these men that they have no rights. They willingly and wickedly divested themselves of them, and whatever privileges they now enjoy, and shall hereafter enjoy as American citizens, they must possess, not by virtue of any claim or right of their's, but only as the result of the clemency of the Government which they would have destroyed, if they could have done it.

MOVE ON. Every person who has occasion to pass along Chestnut street, at almost any hour of the day or night, has experienced the annovances incident to gathering of persons upon the street corners, to obstruct the passage of promenaders, stare ladies out of countenance, defile their dresses through filthy practices, such as come of chewing and smoking, and occasionally, when opportunity offers, to relieve passers-by of their watches or port-monnaies. There was no special locality to which this annoyance was confined; it was scattered all along the street; but the corners of Eighth street and the neighborhood of the Continental Hotel were the localities that were most afficted, and by the worst class of loungers. Storekeepers along the line of the street complained, citizens generally remonstrated, and within a few days Mayor Me-Michael, moved thereto by the reasons given above, directed the policemen who are stationed along Chestnut street to require all these biped obstructions to imitate "Poor Joe," and "move on."

The order of the Mayor has been carried out within the past day or two, and notwithstanding the fact that some few citizens were a little sensitive concerning the interference with their reserved right to be in the way at pleasure, and that some of the officers did not exercise the utmost possible discrimination and perform their duties in the most delicate way in the world, the rule has worked well. The Copperhead press that was fearful that candidate MeMichael would not perform his duties efficiently, now protest that Mayor McMichael exceeds his authority and outrages the rights of citizens. We have no doubt our worthy Chief Magistrate will persist in the course he has adopted without taking Copperhead strictures much to heart. He is too well experienced in public affairs to attempt to imitate the old man in the fable who tried to please everybody and succeeded in pleasing nobody. The public desire to have a long existing nuisance abated storekeepers have suffered in pocket by it, and only the thoughtless and the profligate complain of its abatement. There may be instances where officers perform their duty rudely or injudiciously; but the Mayor will furnish a rene y in all such cases where complaint is made by citizens and the fault of the officer is made clear.

Professor Nobel, the inventor of the new explosive substance which has recently been trought into notice through a series of unintentional experiments that have at least left no doubts existing in the public mind concerning its tremendous power, is out in a "card." He asks a suspension of public opinion, and he claims that his new compound is as safe, when properly other hand, there are not a few who decountry, and in so doing they relin and would-be suppressors of nitro-gly-. quished the rights and privileges which cerine are wrong. The inventor, manufacturers and shippers of the new explosive were wrong, grossly and unpardonably wrong, in permitting the oil to be shipped abroad and to be handled by hundreds of persons before its explosive properties were thoroughly understood and before the conditions under which it would explode were completely tested and ascertained. The criminality of such recklessness has been demonstrated by the terrible explosions in Greenwich street, New York, at San Francisco, and latest horror of all, at Aspinwall. Gunpowder and gun-cotton may be good familiar servants when properly managed; but it would have been grossly criminal for Schwartz or Friar Bacon to have shipped their black grains at the hands of teamsters who would have smo ed their pipes in oblivion of the mine that surrounded them; and it would have been unpardonable for Schönbein to have sent an invoice of gun-cotton on a railway train, or a steamboat, done up in bales, and with skipper and stoker unconscions of the slumbering devil in canvass that a spark would arouse. The world cannot afford to lose the services of these important instrumentalities because accidents may happen through their agency, and in just the degree that nitro-glycerine excels gunpowder in power, in just that degree is its value enhanced.

We are not in favor of the total suppression of nitro-glycerine because it is a powerful agent, any more than we would abolish the use of steam and gunpowder because both have wrought great mischief; nor yet would we permit this terrific agent of force to be shipped in our vessels or stored in our cities until its properties are thoroughly understood and the conditions under which it will explode are accurately ascertained.
