EVENING BULLETIN.

TUESDAY, APRIL 24, 1866.

CONCERNING COTTON. He would have been accounted a fool who would have predicted, on the 1st of September, 1865, that the receipts of cotton at all the Southern shipping ports, between that time and the middle of April, 1866, would be over a million and a half of bales. Yet such is the fact, and it must excite wonder in the minds of those who put faith in the predictions of last spring that there would be little or no cotton produced. In truth cotton prophets are not to be relied on. They are bulls and bearsgenerally bulls, who try to keep crying up the price by crying down the quantity.

The conquered, devastated, impoverished South, with its system of slave labor suddenly destroyed, was, in fact. hardly to be expected to produce much cotton in the first year of its subjugation. It is phenomenal, but so is everything phenomenal in this extraordinary thing phenomenal in this extraordinary country. Secession was a phenomenon; so was the war that followed it, so was the sudden termination of that war, and so is the cotton crop of the first year of peace and emancipation. Cotton put the United States Government to a pretty severe trial, and the Government triumphed. Cotton has ceased to be a king in politics, but it may become all powerful in commerce. At any rate, in its discrowned condition, it gets hands to plant it, cultivate it, gather it and send it to market, at the very time that we are told that the negroes will not work and that no cotton crop will be raised.

The cotton croakers are this year trying to play over the game of last year, throwing dust in the e, es and stuffing cotton wool in the ears of those that really want to know the truth about cotton. They say: true, there was more cotton planted and raised in 1865 than we expected; but there will be less in 1866, for the negroes either will not work, or will not keep to their contracts when they do begin to work. Then the Freedmen's Bureau bill and the Civil Rights bill and the opposition to President Johnson's policy are going to play the very mischief all through the South, and cotton is bound to go under. These wise and, of course, sincere prognostications, may serve to keep up the price of raw cotton and compel us to pay dearly for our muslins during this whole year. But the truth will prevail at last, and people will learn that, in a time of peace, the production of American cotton is irrepressible, and that under the system of free labor, it is going to increase to an amazing extent.

There is poetic justice in the idea that cotton, which brought on our frightful war and its frightful debt, is going to be a principal means of paying the debt. The export of it to Europe is already preserving the equilibrium of trade, and we want it taxed in some way, so as to make it send large returns to the United States Treasury. There is no product that will better bear such taxation, and no tax would be less severely felt than a tax on cotton. When the crop amounts, as it will, before very long, to five, six or even ten millions of bales per annum, the price of cotton and cotton goods will be low in spite of the tax. PREMIUM ON PERJURY.

Mr. Rogers, of New Jersey, rarely speaks without saying something. He never talks platitudes. If he did, he would not have afforded the amusement to Congress and the country that he has given us this winter. So well has his reputation for saying and doing funny things been established, that he is now always sure of an audience whenever he addresses the House. Yesterday he got a chance, and, of course, improved it. The Judiciary Committee made its report on the President's recommendation to modify the Test Oath, and Rogers was, as usual, in a minority of one. His minority report is as earnest an apology and plea for the rebels as could have been expected. He recites the various compulsory motives under which the Southern people went into rebellion. He divides them into four classes: first, rebels by force of belief in State Sovereignty; second, rebels for the sake of making a living; third, rebels to avoid conscription; and fourth, rebels by means of conscription. How far any of these lofty motives will appeal to any really loyal mind or heart is a question. Mr. Rogers evidently considers them all good and valid excuses for rebellion, and desires to modify the Test Oath so as to give them all the Southern offices as soon as possible. His remedy is to strike out the third clause of the oath and to substitute for it a clause to read as follows:-"That I have not voluntarily sought any office whatever under any authority or pretended authority in hostility to the United States."

Mr. Rogers clearly means everybody in his four classes of rebels to be let in under this amendment. He regards them all as having acted under some pressure which deprived their treason of a voluntary character, and he proposes to them his improved oath, in order to fill the Southern offices with his Southern friends. There are comparatively few men, whose consciences were elastic enough to renounce their old oaths of allegiance, who would not be ready to give them the slight additional stretch that would be needful to adapt them to Mr. Rogers's patent oath. The amendment, if it could only be engineered through Congress, would offer a tempt ing premium to all manner of false swearing, and its demoralizing effect upon the people of the South would be far more pernicious than any evil that can possibly come from placing the power of the reconstructed States in the hands of the unhappily small minority of men who were loyal to their country,

"first, midst, and last of all." THE TRIAL OF PROBST.

It is expected that the trial of Anton Probst, for the murder of the Dearing family, will be commenced to-morrow in the Court of Oyer and Terminer. Although there is no doubt of the guilt of the miscreant, the trial will excite intense interest. Some delay may occur in obtaining a jury, especially if the absurd plan be adopted of excluding from the jury box such men as may have formed an opinion concerning the guilt of the accused. But it is likely that the requisite twelve men will be obtained to-morrow, and the testimony will be proceeded with at once. We intend to have the proceedings reported as fully as possible in the BULLETIN every day, up to the latest moment.

Bierstadt's New Picture. "A Storm in the Rocky Mountains," the last great work by Bierstadt, is now on exhibition at Wenderoth, Taylor & Brown's, No. 912 Chestnut street. No description can do justice to this wonderful landscape. Its magnificent beauty is overpowering. There is enough in it to furnish ideas for as many smaller landscapes as there are in the Academy exhibition. The technical excellences of the work are extraordinary, but the conception and the composition are no less admirable. But, as already stated, it is idle to attempt to describe the work, or to point out any of its manifold beauties. It must be seen, and those who avail themselves of the opportunity of seeing it will have the satisfaction of knowing that they are aiding "The Lincoln Institution, or Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Boys' Home."
