Irishmen upon their own soil, and Irishmen who are aliens in other lands, may tak over the wrongs of Ireland as much as they please, and organize as extensively as they choose, for the purpose of redressing those wrongs; but adopted citizens of the United States should bear in mind that they have renounced all allegiance to foreign powers and that their fealty is due to the country that shelters them and elevates them to the dignity of citizenship. Judging from the professions of zeal of some of the Fenian oracles for the Jorden State and elevates of some of the Fenian oracles for the yet unborn Irish republic, America would have but few Hibernian supporters in the event of the United States becoming involved in a war with the new republic after it came into existence. But the zealous Irishman should remember that it is here his lot is cast and that here his allegiance is due, and that if he cannot renounce his fealty to all the world besides the land of his adoption, his American citizenship is a sham and a disguise that has only been assumed to suit his own purposes, to be worn at pleasure and to be discarded whenever his interests or his prejudices prompt him to form new political ties. These things are worthy of the consideration of all American-Irish Fenians.

REGULAR PROMOTIONS.

The award of brevet rank in the regular service, recently made by the Board convened for that purpose, will of course create a considerable discussion in the army. The decision of the Board restricts brevet promotions to officers who have distinguished themselves in the field, in the presence of the enemy. This ruling of course excludes a very meritorious class of officers, whose faithful performance of non-combatant duty has been of incalculable service to the country. An officer like General Hammond Vinton, at New York, or Colonel George H. Crossman, at Philadelphia, whose administration of a vast Quartermaster's Department has involved the disbursement of millions upon millions of the public funds, is not included in the recommendation of the Board. And yet services such as these have required the highest abilities, the sternest integrity, the most exhausting labor, the most onerous responsibility. There is a large class of officers who occupied such positions as these during the war, whose merits are cordially appreciated by the War Department, by the Army Board which has just reported, and by the country at large, and at first sight the decision of the Board may appear unfair to many minds. But there are certain things to be borne in mind, in a case like this. In the first place, the character of the Board itself. It consisted of Generals Sherman, Meade and Thomas, General Sheridan not being present. It is quite impossible to suppose that these officers have had any object in view, except the best interests of the service. Their own position in the army, their intimate friendly relations with most of the officers affected by their adverse decision, and their unimpeachable personal characters forbid the idea of their being actuated by any but the highest and most honorable motives. The only question that can possibly be raised will be as to the correctness of their judgment. There cannot have been any wish to disparage the officers who were assigned to bureau or departmental duty. We venture to assert that any one of the members of the Board would prefer the risks of the battle-field to the vexations, harassments and responsibilities of a bureau. The Board express a decidedly unfavorable opinion of the whole system of brevet promotions. They believe that it would be better for the interests of the service "to substitute in its place some other mode of reward for special gallantry in action; such as medals commemorative of the event, or to make actual promotion to vacancies without regard to prior rank." They look upon the conferring of brevet rank upon all meritorious officers as calculated to create confusion by the great number of high grades that it would create. In a war like that which has just closed, the officers of the regular army, who remained true to their flag, all behaved well, all understand and appreciate a few princi- did their duty, and all deserve, what ples that they would doubtless have they so freely receive, the grateful approval of their superior officers, of the army whose interests they have so well feeling which British "neutrality" had | served, and of the country whose cause they have so efficiently sustained. The officers who were detailed for departmental service are amongst the best refer is simply this. The American and ablest in the service, and, while we feel satisfied that the Board has come to a wise and proper decision upon this difficult and delicate question, we cannot but regret that it has been one of the bation, and make them eligible for most | many fortunes of war that these noncombatant officers are prevented from sharing the honors, when they would so gladly have shared the dangers of the battle-field.

The Fenian movement, that promised so much upon paper, seems to have come to a most lame and impotent conclusion, and the accounts of seizures of Fenian arms and the breaking up of Fenian organizations betray such a ridiculous disproportion of means to proposed ends as to render the entire business absurd and laughable. There are but few persons who feel any commiseration for the leaders of the movement upon our own soil; for if they had carefully arranged a programme to make their cause appear puerile and to render themselves ridiculous, they could scarcely have achieved a greater success in those respects than they have already attained. For the simple and trusting masses who contributed their hard earnings for the "liberation of Ireland," there is more of sympathy and pity. But it would be well if the great mass of Irishmen in this country could be made to heard tell of more frequently during the Fenian flurry, were it not for the bad engendered towards the British government during the rebellion.

One of the principles to which we people offer an asylum here for the oppressed of all nations. They receive strangers with open arms, give them the right of suffrage after a very short propublic offices just as though they were born upon the soil. The Irish have not been slow to avail themselves of these privileges, and no class of adopted citizens are more jealous of their rights under our laws, or more anxious to fill such offices as are within their reach. The American people feel an i think that in return for what they confer upon the Itish immi. rant the latter should be content to forego foreign affiliations and to be in heart and feeling what he is in rights and privileges, an American citizen. We have no bjection whatever to the Irish people striking a blow for the independence of their country, and we care very little for the amount of un-easiness they may cause the govern-ment of Great Britain; but we submit that it is not consistent with that American citizenship of which the Irishman is so jealous, to profess a boisterously earnestallegiance to a foreign government, Utopian though it may be. to the Irish people striking a blow for
