EVENING BULLETIN.

THURSDAY, APRIL 26, 1866. A GERMAN WAR.

Germany has been the scene of war at various times, through so many oenturies, that the prospect of a new war on German soil ought not to be very surprising. But the people of the United States, who have had such recent and terrible experience, look with dread and horror upon all signs of war, in whatever country they may be visible. They especially deprecate it in this case of Austria and Prussia, where there is no great principle of nationality or freedom involved, and where the dispute is between two greater powers for the possession of provinces most unrighteously wrested from a smaller power.

There must be some means devisable for preventing a war about such a matter. It is monstrous to think that gratify the ambitious and aggressive spirit of the rulers of Prussia, a war should be begun which must unquestionably bring inconceivable misery upon millions of people. For a war between Prussia and Austria would soon involve other nations. The smaller German States, Bavaria and Saxony especially, could not well be kept out of the conflict, for their own territories would probably be occupied by the contending armies. There are plausible grounds for suspecting that Italy would joln Prussia, for the sake of obtaining Venetia. France is already supposed to be organizing an army of observation to be sent to the Rhenish frontier, and this would make the positions of Belgium, Holland and Baden decidedly critical, and perhaps they would become involved in the conflict in one way or another. Russia and Turkey could get into it without much difficulty, Russia on the side of Prussia, and Turkey on that of Austria. Indeed, the only important European States that would be sure to keep out are England, Spain, Portugal and Switzerland.

In addition to the natural horror that all human creatures have of any war, Americans have other and practical reasons for hoping that peace may now be preserved in Europe. A war would certainly bring on a commercial and financial crisis on the Continent, and we should feel its effects in this country. There are large amounts of German capital invested in American securities and there is danger that considerable amounts of these would come back to us to oe converted into cash, at a tame when we should have no cash to spare. Emigration from Germany would probably be arrested, for in war-cime the conscription would sweep up all the able-bodied men, and it is rot unlikely that emigration would be forbidden. There are various other ways in which we should feel the effects of a war in Europe in an unpleasant and dangerous way.

There is one view that may be taken in which the war might appear to be advantageous in this country. It would probably hasten the withdrawal of all the European troops now in Mexico, and this would of course bring on the downfall of Maximilian and his bastard empire. For this we should rejoice; but we trust that the same end may be attained, within a reasonable time, without having a whole continent convulsed by a bloody war.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS. Although law and punishment have done something towards the repression of this vice, it is still far too prevalent and there is necessarily much of it that is wholly unwitnessed, and therefore unchecked. We see what is done on the highway, but that is all, and we can only judge from that of what is done elsewhere. In one case, however, which happened here some years since, impunity did not accompany concealment, and the circumstance is sufficiently curious to be worth relating.

A gentleman, who chanced to see a driver cruelly treating a mule, had him brought before a magistrate and fined. The driver, determined to be avenged on what he chose to consider the source of his disgrace and humiliation, took the mule to his stable, tied the animal up, and commenced giving it there, where no one could interfere, a most savage beating. The animal, in its agony, gave a desperate kick, striking him full in the head; the man fell down dead.

Lessons like this, and even the punishments of the law, do not come often enough, or certainly enough, to accomplish the end required. There is one way, and but one way, in which this can be done. It is in the education of the young. Tenderness and forbearance to the whole brute creation should form a regular part of the instruction of our public schools. The children should be taught that if animals are made subject to us, we are absolutely responsible to our common Maker for our conduct to them. It is our duty to treat them well, and to teach others to do so. Tenderness to animals is not an instinct with man; it comes only by thought and by teaching. To the young such teaching is as essential as any other, and if neglected by parents, it should not be overlooked either by those whose business it is to systematize the instruction of the voung in our public schools, or those who have education committed to their care in any of its forms. This subject has not hitherto received the attention which it deserves, and which, it is to be hoped, it may receive in the future
