EVENING BULLETIN.

TUESDAY, MAY 1, 1866.

SENATOR DAVIS AT BAY. It will be remembered that Mr. Garrett Davis has, on more than one occasion, so far presumed upon the patience of the loyal members of the Senate as to give utterance to sentiments as outrageously treasonable as any that were heard in that chamber during the winter of 1860-61. On one of the occasions referred to, he openly declared himself an enemy of the Government, and on another he advocated the revolutionary scheme of assembling a rebel Congress at Washington. We are glad to see that Mr. Davis is no longer likely to enjoy the impunity with which he has indulged his traitorous feelings in the presence of the representatives of the loyal States of this Union. Yesterday, in the course of the debate on Mr. Trumbull's proposition to regulate removals from office, Mr. Henderson revived Mr. Davis's programme of a rebel Congress in Washington, and compelled him to defend his position. This he did in a very lame and bungling way, upon a sort of fourthrate lawyer's plea, devoid of reason or sincerity. But even this small success was unceremoniously demolished by Mr. Anthony, of Rhode Island, who disclosed the significant fact that the redoutable traitor from Kentucky had actually suppressed the very speech which he was pretending to defend, and that no record of it appeared in the official report in the Globe. Hunted from one covert to another, Davis was driven to the miserable prevarication that he intended to print the speech in the appendix of the Globe. Mr. Howard, of Michigan, saved him that trouble by producing the original report of his words, as taken down by the reporters, and causing it to be read by the Secretary. We remember no language from the seceding Senators in 1861 more distinctly treasonable in spirit and intent than these words of the Senator from Kentucky. He directly advises the President to recognize a revolutionary Congress, to be composed exclusively of Bouthern rebels and Northern Copperheads. He says: "It is his power, and ponsible to the regularly constituted au-I would advise him to use it. He has thorities of the city for the faithful per-here, as the constitutional body." Mr. Davis was evidently much disgusted at this unexpected exposition of the treason which he thought he had buried out of sight; but his audacity did not entirely desert him, and he arose to avow his present approval of the sentiment. This appears to have been too much for the honest patriotism of the Senator from Michigan. In the plainest words which our language affords, he pronounced Mr. Davis's confessed principle "revolutionary, unconstitutional and treasonable," and in order to mark more emphatically the Senate's reprobation, moved an immediate adjournment. Such a motion, made by a friend of a pending amendment, was a declaration that the Senate was nauseated with such treasonable stuff as it had been compelled to listen to from one of its members, and would have no more of

it. We trust that the loyal majority of the Senate will no longer allow itself to be insulted either by the drunken in decencies of McDougall and Saulsbury, or by the impotent talk of treasor, of men like Garrett Davis. There must be legal methods by which the Senate can protect its own dignity, and we trust that there will no longer be any hesitation in using them.

THE RECONSTRUCTION REPORT. Every paper published in the late rebel States, and every Copperhead paper in the always loyal States, oppose the plan of reconstruction reported by the Congressional committee of fifteen. The only paper of any influence that was ever called Republican, and that opposes the plan, is the New York Times. All these rebel and Copperhead organs are loud in praise of President Johnson, and, seeming to be in his confidence, they predict that he will veto the measures reported, if they are passed by Congress. And yet the requirements of the committee's plan are not nearly so severe upon the conquered South as were those expressed by President Johnson in the beginning of his administration, before the alluring vision of a second Presidential term, through the votes of the Southern traitors and Northern Copperheads, arose in his brain. It suffers thousands of traitors to be let off with a temporary disfranchisement, and this is considered to be too severe a punishment by President Johnson. Yet only one year ago he declared that "treason was a crime and must be punished:" that it was "the blackest of crimes;" that "traitors should suffer its penalty," and that the American people "must be already believe it. The Committee of Fifteen proposes a penalty for treason which is no punishment at all, being evidently anxious to make some concessions to the President's singularly changed opinions. But he and his new friends will be satisfied with nothing less than complete oblivion of all the past, and the instant admission of traitors to Congress, without any guarantees for the future peace of the country. Happily the Executive is not the whole government, and we are confident that Congress will stand

FIREMEN'S REFORMS. Some years ago, the BULLETIN strongly advocated certain reforms in the Fire Department, which it firmly believed would add to the efficiency of the service, and in many respects tend to the advantage of the community. These reforms may be briefly summed up as follows: The organizing of the Department by the appointment of Engineers, who should be responsible to the public for the faithful performance of their duties; the payment of all active firemen for their services; the establishment of a district system which would prevent fire companies from running from one end of the city to the other on the occasion of every alarm of fire; the stopping of the ringing of the State House bell for ordinary fires; the construction of a fire alarm telegraph; the use of steam machinery for the extinguishment of conflagrations; the employment of horses for the purpose of dragging apparatus to fires, and last, though not least in importance, the appointment of a Fire Detective.

Most of these reforms have been brought about by degrees, and those who at first opposed them most bitterly are now their earnest friends and warm advocates. The steam fire engine was among the first of the innovations, and we well remember how shouts of derision were uttered when the powerful although cumbrous machine made by Mr. Latta, of Cincinnati, was tried at Dock street wharf. In New York the firemen turned their streams upon a steamer at a fire, to show their dislike of the employment of steam engines at conflagrations; while in Philadelphia they were content to hoot at and oppose them. In both cities these potent machines have lived down all opposition, and here the steamer business has been somewhat run into the ground and overdone. The use of steamers brought about the employment of horses, and the companies that were once most violently opposed to four-footed aid, now pride themselves upon the style and mettle of their steeds. The district system is firmly established; the fire-alarm telegraph is deemed an indispensable adjunct to the Department; the State House bell strikes for no ordinary fires during day light; we have a fire detective under the title of Fire Marshal, and we have Chief and Assistant Engineers to control the department, and who are res-

the right, and by the Eternal, he ought | formance of duty. All these reforms to exercise that right. If I were he, I have been brought about slowly and by would do it to-morrow, and recognize the | degrees, and most of them in the face of Southern members, with the minority | strong opposition; but we believe that with the single exception of the silencing of the State House bell, the firemen themselves are now unanimously in favor of the changes and improvements which have been wrought in the ancient no-system. A paid Fire Department is the only one of all the measures which we advocated years ago which has not yet been brought about. But the Chief Engineer and his assistants receive compensation from the public treasury; the engineers employed by steam fire engine companies are paid for their services, while the annual appropriations made by City Councils for the support of the Fire Department amount to a much larger sum than a responsible party was willing to accept by contract in payment for extinguishing all fires that might occur in the city. So we have almost virtually a paid Fire Department.

> These thoughts were suggested to us on Saturday last by witnessing a turnout made by one of the strongest, most useful and most spirited organizations in the Fire Department. The occasion was the reception of a pair of handsome horses that had been presented to the company by some brother firemen at Reading. There was a steam fire engine drawn by horses in the line of the procession, and the Chief Engineer of the Fire Department officiated as Marshal of the parade. The parading firemen probably never gave a thought to the steam-horse-and-paid-officer innovations which they were giving their countenance and sanction to by the display. Ten or twelve years ago this same company would doubtless have frowned down a proposition to bring about either of the reforms which they glorified on Saturday. We congratulate them on their keeping pace with the progress of the times; but we must claim that in these Fire Department reforms the Bul-LETIN was a few years in advance of the age. The world moves sometimes slowly, but generally surely.
