THE SACRIFICES MADE BY THE LOY-AL STATES TO QUELL TREASON AND TO SUSTAIN THE REPUBLIC.

Interesting Statistics of the Loss of Life in our Armies during the Rebellion. The following table shows the total casualties in action, and from the effect of wounds and disease, in the volunteer troops furnished by the several States and Territories, in the regular and colored troops and other organizations, raised directly under the authority of the United States, and the aggregate number of troops raised under all calls reduced to the three year's standard:

MEN.
Of the grand total of deaths from all causes (two hundred and eighty thousand four hundred and twenty) there died, in action and of wounds, one hundred and fifty-seven officers of the regular army, and five thousand and sixty-four of other white and colored troops, and of disease, eighty-three of the former and two thousand two hundred and thirty-eight of the latter, making an aggregate of seven thousand five hundred and forty-two officers. Of the enlisted men comprised in the above grand total, there died, in action, and of wounds, ninety thousand eight hundred and sixtyeight, and of disease, one hundred and eighty-two thousand and ten. From this, it appears first, that of killed in battle and of wounds, there was one offi-cer to every eighteen enlisted men, showing greater suffering from the chances of battle of officers, who, with full ranks, constitute about a twenty-fifth part of the army, than of enlisted men. Secondly, it appears on the other hand, that only one officer to every ninety men has died of disease. The several enuse of this ramericable disease.

severy ninety men has died of disease. The several causes of this remarkable disproportion are evident. Officers are better sheltered than enlisted men.

Their food is generally better in quality and more varied in kind. They are not so much crowded together in tents and therefore less enhicit to controllers and orderies. fore less subject to contagious and epidemic diseases. They have superior advantages in regard to personal cleanliness. As prisoners of war, too, they are generally treated more leniently. Another favoring and by no means least potential cause of a psychological nature, is the superior elasticity of spirit and moral power of endurance which is given to a man by investing him with a commission and its accompanying au-thority, responsibility, and hopes of ad-

EXTRAORDINARY MORTALIY FROM DISEASE AMONG COLORED TROOPS.

A very noteworthy feature of the above the colored troops from disease it exhibits. It is seen that, while but two thousand nine hundred and ninety-seven died in action and of wounds, the enormously large number of twenty-six thousand three hundred and one died of disease. Among the white troops the proportion of deaths in action and from wounds to the deaths from disease is about as one to two; among the colored troops as one to eight. About one hundred and eighty thousand colored men were enlisted in the army during the war, of whom. accordingly, nearly one out of every seven died of disease. The general proportion among white troops is one to fifteen.

These figures indicate conclusively that the negro, in the condition in which the war

These figures indicate conclusively that the negro, in the condition in which the war found him, was less capable than the white man of enduring the trials, physical and moral, of military service. It may be assumed that where one died of disease, at least five others were seriously sick so that a large proportion of the colored troops must have been constantly upon the sick list. A close analysis of the causes of this difference of physical fitness for military difference of physical fitness for military service in the two races, however, would no doubt show that they were in the main of a psychological character; that the great susceptibility of the colored man to disease and buoyancy of feeling, and that a higher moral and intellectual culture would moral and intellectual culture would diminish the defect. This view is sustained by the professional opinion of medical

the Western States, 36.81, and in the Border States, 25.32,

It appears from the foregoing that, as a rule, the mortality from battle ranged highest in the Northernmost States, both Eastern and Western. The high ratio of New England, 44.76, corresponds to that of Iowa, 45.44; of Michigan, 44.82, and of Wisconsin, 42.01. A remarkable deviation from this rule, is presented by Kansas, which is this rule, is presented by Kansas, which is this rule, is presented by Kansas, which is the highest on the list.

The excessive mortality in battle in the froops of that gallant State, is no doubt due to the warlike spirit kindled in its population in the early days of its existpopulation in the early days of its exist-ence, and nourished since. The same sin-gularly martial disposition that induced more than half of the able-bodied men of the State to enter the army without bounty, it may be supposed, led her troops to expose themselves most valorously to the risks of

With the States in groups, we have an average proportion for the New England States, of 70.45; Middle States, 31.79; Western States, 36.81, and Border States, 25.32.

The variations of mortality from disease resulted in part from the nature of the respective services required of troops drawn from different localities.

An undue proportion of New England troops was used in the unhealthy Atlantic and Gulf States of the South, and to this circumstance may be attributed in a measure the fact that 70.45 per thousand of the men from the Eastern States died of disease. The men from the West served in the fever-The men from the West served in the fever-breeding valleys of the Mississippi and its Southern tributaries, and this aided, no doubt, in swelling their mortality list. The troops from the border States served mainly in the same regions, and suffered from the

Again, the Middle States, whose men fought to the larger extent in the Army of the Potomac, lost only 37.88, which is 33.67 below the ratio of the Western States, and 21.34 below the general ratio. Virginia was a healthier field of service than the bottoms of the Tennessee or the lowlands of Louisiana, Mississippi and South Carolina, and it cannot be denied, moreover, that the Army of the Potomac was always by far the best provided of all our large armies.
