EVENING BULLETIN.

THURSDAY, MAY 10, 1866. SOLDIERS' ORPHANS.

If Governor Curtin were simply a politician seeking popularity, or an ambitious man seeking future fame, he could not have accomplished his end more efhis system of educating and providing for the orphans of the soldiers of Pennsylvania. But his aim and motive has been a far nobler and higher one than either of these, and from the first breaking out of the rebellion he devoted himself, with an energy which was inspired by the loftiest patriotism, to the selfimposed duty of making the children of the dead soldiers of the Republic the children of the Commonwealth. The task, as it has grown on his hands, has proved a Herculean one, requiring the utmost patience, sagacity and perseverance. Four thousand orphan children, of both sexes, claim the benefit of our State legislation, and these children are being rapidly distributed throughout the State, either in existing schools or in schools established expressly for the purpose. Over the management of these schools, Governor Curtin is exercising a watchful personal care, and although there are, doubtless, many defects in the earlier workings of so vast a machinery we are glad to know that he has abated none of the energy which he has exercised for years past, in perfecting the working of his system in all its practical

In prosecuting this important work many serious difficulties have been encountered, but thus far all have been overcome. An interesting question has arisen recently, which the Governor is now engaged in solving. It is well known that during the war many men from Pennsylvania enlisted in the regiments of other States, while, on the other hand, citizens of other States enlisted in our regiments. The relative claims of the orphans of these two classes have been brought under consideration by the application of a widow of a Pennsylvanian, who had temporarily sought employment in Connecticut, and while there enlisted in a regiment of that State. Her husband was killed in the service and she appeals to Governor Curtin for permission to place her boy in one of the State schools. It is evident that Pennsylvania ought not to be taxed with the support and education of the orphans of both these classes, but it is not quite so clear which class should come under our care. The Governor has submitted the question to Mr. Burrowes, the State Superintendant, and he, while admitting the embarrassment of the case, expresses his preference for the orphans of "persons from other States who joined our regiments and thus, to some extent, became Pennsylvanians." We coincide with this view of the subject, for the same reason given by the State Superintendent, who argues that the opposite course would be in many cases, a premium to the families of those who, for the mere sake of larger bounties, turned their backs upon their own State, when she needed every treaty between the various States, by which the care of all classes of soldiers' orphans shall be secured. For this purpose, a correspondence has been opened by him with the Governors of the other States, calling their attention to this important matter, and recommending that some such arrangement be made as will properly divide the responsibility which rests upon all, to provide for the children of those who fell in defence of the Union.

The example of Pennsylvania has already been followed by several States, and this correspondence of Governor Curtin's will have the effect of pressing the subject upon the attention of those that have hitherto neglected this obvious duty. It will stand as a bright page on our future history, if it shall appear that after the danger and excitement of civil war were over, the States that sustained each other in defending our common country, and vied with each other in sending the myriads of their citizen-soldiers into the field, united in the grateful task of supplying to the destitute orphans which the war had made, that protection and education of which they were deprived by the sad consequences of war.

Governor Curtin's term of public service draws to a close. The last survivor of the noble band of loyal Governors, amongst whom he has ever stood foremost, in all patriotic support of the Government in its hours of peril, his administration has been one of incessant toil. But in all the proud record of his two administrations, no portion of his policy will cast such a lasting lustre about his name, as that which connects him with the living soldier and with that soldier's destitute and neglected orphan. The thousands of little children who have been gathered by him under the fostering care of the Commonwealth, as they grow up to take their places of honor and usefulness in the community, will be a living monument to his patriotic devotion and his practical philanthrophy, the value of which to him and to his posterity cannot be realized or de-

THE PUBLIC LEDGER. Our enterprising cotemporary at Third and Chestnut streets is going to work in good earnest in the improvement of the fine property at the southwest corner of Sixth and Chestnut streets. One hundred feet will be added to the depth of the property on Sixth street. The addition will be made to correspond with the beautiful brown stone structure on the corner, and the whole will be surmounted with a French mansarde roof. The structure, when completed, will be one of the most imposing private edifices in the city. The Ledger will take possession of its new quarters about the first of January, 1867. Mr. Childs is giving a fresh impetus to this prosperous iournal, and among the latest evidences

TOHOUSEKFEPERS, for cleaning silver and silver plated ware, and we possession of its new quarters about the first of January, 1867. Mr. Childs is giving a fresh impetus to this prosperous iournal, and among the latest evidences fectively than by the establishment of of his enterprise and foresight is the locating of the permanent office of the paper in the new centre of the newspaper business of the city. CARL GAERTNER'S CONCERT.-We published, a short time since, a sketch of the musical labors of Mr. Carl Gaertner. The Concert referred to in it will be a Matinée, and will be held at the Foyer of the Academy of Music, on Thursday, May 17. Mr. Gaertner will be assisted by Mme. Abel, from New York, the Classical Quintette Club, and others. This is Mme. Abel's first visit to Philadelphia, and we expect great pleasure in hearing her. She is a pupil of Chopin, and has elicited the warmest praise from Berlioz, and other critics, as a pianist of the true classical school, and is compared frequently to Mme. Clara Schumann.

"THE DEATH-BED OF LINCOLN" is the title of a large photographic copy of a painting by John H. Littlefield, of Washington, formerly a student of Mr. Lincoln's. The members of the Cabinet, and all the others who were present at the death of the President, are grouped around his bed, each being a faithful likeness taken from a photograph. As a work of art the picture has great merit; and it is historically valuable because of its fidelity to fact. Mr. Blake, son of Chaplain Blake, of the army, who is agent for the sale of the work in Pennsylvania, is in Philadelphia, engaging canvassers.
