The Hazardville Powder Explosion. The Hartford Times of the 8th has the following details regarding the recent terrible calamity at Hazardville, Conn.: "The explosion took place in the press mill, a central one among the many scat-tered buildings devoted to the manufac-ture of powder in the valley known as Hazardyille. This mill was completely annihilated, not a foundation stone or a piece of timber remaining. Blackened and aminifiated, not a foundation stone of a piece of timber remaining. Blackened and broken timbers, blown to a distance of eighty rods from the spot, and the black-ened and ghastly fragments of what had one been human beings—here a finger, there a foot or a hand—attested the terrific forecast the completion. Some of the badies force of the explosion. Some of the bodies may have been thrown into the adjoining pond, which will be drained to-day for the purpose of finding them.

"As usual, the amount of powder that exploded is difficult for newspaper reporters to obtain. One version has it four tons, and others fifteen and seventeen tons. tons, and others fifteen and seventeen tons. We believe the amount to have been over ten tons. Certaingly the shock, plainly felt in this city, eighteen miles distant, and the vast pillar of solid white smoke ascend-ing to the skies and plainly seen at a dis-tance of twenty miles, would indicate a large explosion. A little mill adjoining the press mill, and containing two tons of powder, is said to have exploded with the others.

others. "We learn that the 'press mill' has been undergoing repairs, with some changes, and that this was the first batch of powd r put under the screw since the repairs. Doubtunder the screw since the repairs. Doubt-less this repairing had left some unseen bit of metal, stone or other substance in a place where friction or force elicited a spark. The mill was a heavily framed wooden building, twenty-five by fifty feet, in which the mixture that had been run through the twe to be unseen to be pressed. 'wheel mill' was taken to be pressed. This mixture, consisting of saltpetre, charcoal and brimstone, comes from the wheel mill in a mealy condition, possessing the full power of powder; and it is placed under a heavy iron screw-press to be pressed into solid estas solid cakes. "The explosion set the wooded slopes up

"The explosion set the wooded slopes up the adjoining hill on fire, and the flames originating in several places, spread rapidly toward two other mills on the other side of the hill. From this source the danger was so great that the whole effective force of Colonel Hazard's employes was put in requisition to extinguish the flames. This, by hard work, and the superior bravery and devotion of one man, whose courage called back the rest when disposed to run, was finally done, when the fire had ap-proached to a point within five rods of one of the enlarged mills. How men can be induced te work in powder mills seems to induced te work in powder mills seems to be a mystery. At any price the risk of life is too great to be hazarded. Yet there are plenty of applications, and the prices it is said, are not on an average over $2 a day."
