Charles Dickens as a Public Reader.

Amidst all this fashionable and timekilling folderol, there is one entertainment which deserves more than a passing mention, and that is the readings from his own works with which Dickens is nightly feasing large and fashionable audiences. Some months since the distinguished writer made an arrangement with the Messrs, Chappell, by which he agreed to read from his writings two evenings in each week for a certain number of months. For each night he was to receive £50 and his expenses. The plan has been attended with great success, and crowds have thronged the house whenever he appeared. Thousands have taken the opportunity of seeing face to face him who has been for years one of their domes-tic idols, and thus testifying to the respect and popularity which he enjoys wherever-his works are known.

The readings that Mr. Dickens has given in London have all taken place at St. James's Hall, Piccadilly. Its situation is very central and it has always been popular as a place of amusement. The principal room will accommodate about two thousand five hundred people, and every night hundreds have been turned away for want numreds have been turned away for want of seats. In order to allow of all conditions in society, there are taree prices of admission. Seats in the main body of the house cost five shillings, those in the balcony three, and the rest principally in a high gallery and far off in the background, are sold for two. sold for two. In the rear of the stage is a large screen covered with crimson cloth. In front is a small reading-stand over which is a tall frame-work about eight feet square. a tall frame-work about eight feet square consisting of a gas pipe hidden by a broad band of crimson, if from this issue forth many small jets of light which of cours shed a bright glow upon the speaker and bring out his form and features in strong relief. Precisely at eight Dickens makes his appearance with white kids, a red rose in his button-hole, and a jaunty little walking-stick with an ivory handle. He is in full evening dress of black, and wears no jewelry but a ring and watch-chain. He idli evening dress of black, and wears rojewelry but a ring and watch-chain. Hesteps briskly forward, swinging his cane, and at once taking his stand at the desk, without any preliminary introduction, quietly surveys his audience. Lond and long-continued clapping announces his presence, but he does not yet begin. An Eaglish audience are never punctual, and by twos and threes they continue to pour in long after his arrival: Dickens calmiv waits till after his arrival. Dickens calmly waits till allisquiet. He is a manof gentlemanly and polished exterior. His head is quite bald, and he wears a moustache and whiskers, His hair is gray, and he has evidently long outgrown the "Boz" of younger days. His expression is genial, and his manner confident, though unassuming. Though he has a slight stoop, yet his form is manly and of good proportions. There is but little expression of character in his face, and his cheeks are ruddy, as of one who loves good cheer. His ears are set very far back, which is generally regarded as a sign of great in-tellectual power. His forehead is high and the labors of a life of fifty-four years have not left a wrinkle upon it. Evidently his works have been done with ease and love, as the natural outspringing of a mind full of subjects that were dear to him and causof subjects that were dear to him and causing little mental anxiety. Altogether Dickees strikes one as a man who has spent a half century, not in the exhausing labors of literature, but in the enjoyment of a life passed in the jovial, perhaps too jovial, society of good company and boon companions: who has for years been "full warm of blood, of mirth, of gossiping, nor met with fortune other than at feasts,"

It is full twenty minutes past eight before

It is full twenty minutes past eight before the voice of the reader strikes upon the ear and all else is hushed. The part is Dr. Marigold, the "Cheap-Jack," and though the book is before him, the speaker never opens it, but trusts to his memory, which never fails him, to the end. As has been often illustrated by his own appearance in private theatricals, Dickens has a great degree of dramatic talent, and in his readings it is used with admirable results. Though he has not much facial expression, though he has not that nervous sensitiveness which many eat actors possess, and which makes Mi Home, the spiritualist, so effective as a reader, yet he has other qualities that render his delivery very impressive. He has a good voice and an animated expression. His hands are used freely and with excellent effect. He is never entirely forgetful of his audience or lost in his part, and yet he ws throughout that nice appreciation of each character, which every author might be expected to possess for the children of his brain. His air, his gestures, and his voice, in short, clearly express his sympathy with the more delicate lights and shadows of the parts he impersonates, and give his andi-ence a deeper insight into the inner life of those whem they thought they knew so well before. The story of Dr. Marigold he read with a mingled humor, pathos, and naïvete that I never supposed it capable of.

This was followed by the trial scene from the Pickwick Papers. And here the abilities of the reader security as well as the reader security as the story of the security of the se ties of the reader secured a great, though an oft-repeated triumph. As an actor he showed more varied talent and stronger contrasts than before. It was really a feast fit for the gods to hear his rendering of the performers in that world-renowned litiga-tion. I will venture to say that never before tion. I will venture to say that never before did his hearers have such a vivid presentation of any one of them. Sam. Weller, the Mercutio of the Pickwick Papers; Mr. Justice Starleigh, that bloated squab of judicial imbecility, the Pickwick of the bench; Mr. Sergeant Buzfuz, with his legal flummery and bunkum talk to the jury; Mrs. Cluppins, and her loquacious twaddle on the stand—all these were in turns set hefore us stand—all these were in turns set before us, each "in his habit as he lived," and as he or she originally doubtless appeared to the mind of their author. Great was the enjoymind of their author. Great was the enjoyment of the audience, and loud their applause, as feature by feature these characters were unfolded and lit up with tints unseen before. It was to some of us like meeting with old friends at the place of their birth, after years of separation. We could only be thankful that such an opportunity for mental delight and improvement tunity for mental delight and improvement had been granted us, though in the minds of some it was tainted by the thought that or some it was tainted by the thought that the whole operation was a mercenary one from beginning to end; that it was a mercener mercantile speculation on the part of all concerned; that Dickens wished to make as much as he could not the Magne Chanmuch as he could out of the Messrs. Chappell, and that the latter would be glad to "coin the former's brain for drachmas," if "coin the former's brain for drachmas," if they could make it pay. But in this age all authors are given to money-making; "tis but to clip his locks they follow now the golden-haired Apollo;" as the inn-keeper remarked to Don Quixote, "money and clean shirts are very essential to success in life." Terpsichore dances and Polyhymnia sings for a guinea a night, and "now lies the earth all Danse to the stars," (operatic and other) that nightly and daily illumine the great world of London. Let us then persistently shut out the golden mean, take the goods the gods provide us, and thus shall we benefit in the grand finale.

State of Affairs in the South, SAVANNAH, May 19.—Generals Steadman and Fullerton had an interview with the African Methodist Episcopal Conference to-day. The information elicited was of a satisfactory character. There was a general concurrence in opinion that the relations between the two races are friendly, and are between the two races are mendly, and are rapidly improving in the States of Georgia, Florida, and North and South Varolina. General Steadman and his party left for Augusta to-night, and will make an investigation into the condition of affairs on the plantations along the river.

AYER'S (CATHARTIO PILLS are the most perfect purgative which we are abletto produce or which, we think has ever yet been made by suppody. Their effects have shundantly shown to the community how much 'they excel the ordinary medicines in 'sse. They are safe and pleasant to take, but powerful to cure. Their penetrating 'properties stimulate the vital soot ties stimulate the vital soot ties the safe and grow distemper, stimulate sluggish or disordered organs into their natural action, and impart a heality tone with strength to the whole system. Not tonly do they cure the every-day complaints of every-body, but also formidable and dangerous diseases. While they produce powerful effects, they are as the same time, in diminished does, the safest and best physic that can be employed for children. Being sugarcusted, they are pleasant, to take; and, being sugarcusted, they are pleasant, to take; and, being sugarcusted, they are pleasant, to take; and being sugarcusted, they are pleasant, to take; and character, as to forbid the suspicion of untruth. This article ower its peculiar value as a DEODORIZER to the fact that it decomposes and destreys all notious gases and vapors that are given off from patrifying animal or vegetable matter

DR. W. E. A. Alkin, Professor of Chemistry in the University of Maryland, says: "For an efficient and reliable Deodorizer and Disingectant, always ready for use, and not liable to any change, equally vasuable in the sick room and in the foul sink, it has, in my opinion, no equal.

This opinion is concurred in by Drs. Militanberger,
Johnson, Chew, McSherry, Butler, and Dr. Yan
Biber, who made the report to the National Similary and Quarantine Convention of 1859, says:

"It is the best deodorant of which I have any knowledge." It aridently assertable.
