EVENING BULLETIN.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 23, 1866. MR. SEWARD AT AUBURN.

The optimism of Mr. Seward is something wonderful to behold. He takes the jolliest view of every situation that the mind of man can conceive of. He clung to the theory that the rebellion would be put down in sixty days through four long years of frightful war. Such constancy to an idea, which fate and time were continually controverting, is worthy of admiration, even if it should destroy all confidence in Mr. Seward's judgment and his inspirations as a prophet. The faith that he expressed, however, and probably felt, was invaluable to him, and to the country as its minister for foreign affairs, for it enabled him to demand and often obtain repeated and indefinite extensions of his sixty days promissory notes, and he thus averted the much dreaded recognition of the Southern confederacy by foreign powers.

Mr. Seward has long been meditating a formal and new definition of his views on the question of reconstruction, so as to explain to the country why he has abandoned the party with which he has always been identified and become the ardent advocate of the instant unconditional admission to Congress of representatives chosen by the Southern rebels. He accordingly went to Auburn and, after due announcement, made a speech to his townsmen, in which he said he yielded to their "kind importunity," though there is no evidence that he was invited by them to speak, while there is evidence that he invited them to listen. In this speech he looks through rose-colored glasses at every part of the country, and sees the most cheering and beautiful pictures of loyalty and love for the Union in all the Southern States. He has not a word to say about the innumerable outrages committed against Union men, white and black, in every one of the lately rebellious States. But he dwells upon the idea that there has been no real disruption of the Union. and that therefore there is no need of reconstruction. He chides, in a clever, plausible way, the repugnance of Congress to open its arms to the chosen representatives of these people, who are still cursing the Union and maltreating Union men, evidently thinking that these Southern representatives are wronged and that the Northern ones are unreasonable in exacting from them any terms whatever. Such faith in the fidelity of traitors is as phenomenal and as characteristic as was the faith, that existed through four years, that the rebellion would be ended in sixty days, Reconciliation, says Mr. Seward, is needed, not reconstruction. His idea of this reconciliation is that the loyal people. who made such sacrifices for the war, should forget and forgive all the horrid sins of the Southern politicians, and win their reconciliation by offering them and their copperhead allies the control of the country that they strove to destroy. He says they must not be asked to repent until they are promised forgiveness; for, says he, "even the divine government does not ask sinners to repent without promising them forgiveness and restoration." This is a new version of the received theological doctrine, which is that until sinners repent they cannot be forgiven. Forgiveness is not offered as a reward or a bribe. It is given when the repentance is voluntary. contrite and sincere.

There is no evidence, as yet, of any such repentance at the South. On the contrary, there is a bitter hatred of the Union, which is growing under the fostering and tender treatment of the President and his friends. There is a malignant spirit, which is undisguised, towards the Congress chosen by the people who preserved the Union, and Mr. Seward, with his honeyed words of specious remonstrance to the Northern peo-Ple, is sending joy to the hearts of the ci-devant traitors, and bidding them hope afresh that they have not vainly fought and lost all, but that the real victory-the ultimate control of the nation-will yet be theirs; that the "chivalry" of the South will yet be supreme: that the abolition of slavery will only be nominal, and that, under the title of a Democracy, an Aristocracy that shall lord it over the working men of the land, white as well as black, shall yet be maintained. In his very cheerful contemplation of the difficulties of the country, Mr. Seward refuses to think of any such results as these as even possible. He evidently does not think treason odious, and has no anxiety to have it made so. When he lay, helpless and bleeding under the blows of an assassin, who was a simple agent of the treason that he is so anxious to forget and forgive, would he, could he have spoken, have expressed such very tender sentiments? The multitudinous series of crimes to which that attempt belonged have not been punished, and if they are not to be punished, but are all to be forgiven, as the Secretary of State proposes, there will be the best encouragement for a renewal of them as soon as the South recovers strength and courage. If Congress is to yield all to the President's and Mr. Seward's views, that time cannot be very far distant.

SOLDIERS' MESSENGER CORPS. The Soldiers' Messenger Corps appears to be an assured success. Our citizens generally appreciate the great convenience of the organization, and the men have had every reason to be satisfied with the patronage they have received. The red-caps are seen busily flitting in all parts of the city, engaged in all manner of light work, and the average receipts of the messengers have been such as to guarantee the permanence of this excellent institution. The men, with very few exceptions, have proved themselves reliable, prompt, honest, intelligent and obliging, and are rapidly making hosts of friends. The exceptions to this rule have been promptly removed from the corps, and their places supplied with proper substitutes. Several of the men have secured permanent situations in stores and offices. The requirements for appointment on the force are necessarily very strict, and the agent, Mr. Whiteman, deserves commendation for his determination to weed out all improper members of the corps, and to retain none who are dishonest, intemperate, or otherwise incompetent.

To render this excellent organization permanently successful, the co-operation of those who employ it is absolutely necessary. There are two particulars in which this co-operation should be given. In the first place the men should be assisted in being honest. They should never be paid for an errand without taking a ticket corresponding with the amount. The system of tickets is a very simple one, and not only constitutes a check upon the daily returns of the messengers, but identifies them in case of any failure in the proper performance of their duty. And every such failure should be promptly reported. Neglect to do so will soon beget carelessness and irregularity; public confidence will be destroyed and the whole enterprise be brought into disrepute. The soldiers who form the messenger corps are picked men, chosen for sobriety, honesty and respectability; but they are as liable to temptation as other men, and will yield to it if they are encouraged to do so, by the indifference and indolence of their employers. At present they look upon their red caps as a badge of honorable distinction, and it is to be hoped that it will not degenerate into a symbol of laziness, intemperance or dishonesty.

To Hailroad Companies.

The property known as the 'St. James," on Walnut street, to be sold on Wednesday next by James A. Freeman auctioneer, is especially worthy of the attention of those railroad con panies who contemplate the erection of an office building. Sluated in the very heart of the city, close to the post office and costom house, near all the courts, and within a square of the house, near all the courts, and within a square of the many later and the same block with the North Pennsylvania Railroad and Schuylkill Navigation buildings, it is particularly attractive for such a purpose. An examination of the premises will show that the removal of the bars and the introduction of office furniture is all the alteration that is necessary, while in the rear is an elegant private office, all heated by steam. It is rare such an opportunity is presented, and any company comtemplating the erection of an office will do well to examine it. Sale will be peremptory.

Our stock is large and plain or fashionable people can be well suited. Our customers should be careful to get to the right place, as there is no other establishment in the city in our line of business strictly "one-price." Special notice to our old friends and the public gen-
