world, as a military power, and thus success was due chiefly to the consummate ability of Winfield Scott.

Being a Virginian by birth, the States' Rights politicians ardently hoped, when the rebellion broke out, that General Scott would side with the South.

Should the action of the Senate, in striking out the third section of the Reconstruction plan, be accepted by the House, it will be a very trying test of the sincerity of those who have been loudly proclaiming themselves the dear friends of the President.
