That they were just then starting up the Rio de la Plate, intending to steam inland as far as possible, and then take a steamer of less draught of water, not exceeding six feet, and ascend the stream exceeding six leet, and ascend the stream as far as possible (probably to observe the fighting going on). ROAD-MAKING IN PARIS.—A series of ex-periments has been made by the munici-pality of Paris, to test the comparative merits of rival steam locomotives employed in crushing and consolidating the broken granite laid on the streets. It has been decided that the Ballison locomotive is the better of the two. It has two rollers, the engine being between them, and the boiler on one of them. The motion is communicated by a chain. Its force is ten horse-power, and its consumption of coal about ixteen pounds per horse. It may now be seen, at all hours of the day, crushing smooth the granite of the new boulevards of Paris; in the more crowded thoroughfares if works only at night.
