XXXIXth Congress-First Session. [CLOSE OF YESTERDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.]

SENATE.—Mr. Howard called up the proposed amendment to the Constitution The pending question was upon the fol-Jowing amendment, proposed yesterday by Mr. Doolittle as a substitute for the second section: "After the census is taken in the year 1870, and each succeeding census, Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States which may be in-cluded within this Union, according to the number in each State of male electors over twenty-one years of age, qualified by the laws thereof to choose members of the most numerous branch of its Legislature, and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the seyeral States according to the value of the real and personal taxable property situate in each State not belonging to the State or to the United States." Mr. Poland (Vt.) took the floor. He proceeded to review the different positions held on the subject of reconstruction and the status of the States lately in rebellion, maintaining that the Government had always acted upon the theory that the existence of the States was not destroyed by the war. Nothing but absolute necessity would justify a deviation from this theory now, and no such necessity existed. Ample se-curity for the future could be obtained without it. It would not be safe, however, guarantees against a recurrence of the past few years. He believed the plan as it was now before the Senate would receive the approbation of the country. He believed the President would support it, and use his influence to secure its adoption.

Mr. Stewart said he would briefly explain the reason why he should vote for the pending proposition, though it was known that it was not the one of which he was originally in favor. It was a better plan than he expected would be agreed upon, and might yet lead to general amnesty for universa

Mr. Howe stated the reasons why he should vote for the amendment of Mr. Doo-little. He would also vote for the report of the Committee of Fifteen. Pending the discussion, the Senate went into Executive session, and soon after ad-House.—The bill establishing an educational department at Washington, being under discussion.

Mr. Rogers opposed the bill, as looking to the establishment of another Federal bureau for the purpose of carrying out particular ideas of philanthropy. In that respect, he regarded it as no better and no more constitu-tional than the Freedmen's Bureau bill. He was content to leave education to the States, cities and towns, without any dependence upon a Federal bureau. He denied that the people of the South were uneducated; but, even if the masses were uneducated, it was not they who were responsible for the rebellion, but it was the educated classes who were responsible for it.

The morning hour having expired, as Mr. Rogers closed his remarks, the bill went over till to-morrow. The House then proceeded to the consideration of the bill to reduce and establish the pay of officers, and to regulate the pay of soldiers of the army.

Mr. Davis addressed the House in oppo-sition to the bill, and was followed on the same side by Mr. Rogers.

The discussion of the bill was continued by Messrs. Garfield, Thayer, Dumont and

The House then seconded the previous question and proceeded to vote by yeas and nays on the passage of the bill. The bill was passed: yeas 86, nays 69.

The next business in order was the joint resolution reported by Mr. Bingham (O.) from the Reconstruction Committee, on the 26th of February, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.
On motion of Mr. Bingham, it was indeamendment already adopted by the House covered the same ground.

The next business in order was the bill reported by Mr. Kelley, of Pa., on March 3, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to account region below in the view Delayer. cept League Island, in the river Delaware, for naval purposes.

The Speaker stated that this bill would continue before the House until disposed of Mr. Spalding (O.), from the Committee of Conference on the Military Academy Appropriation bill, made a report, which was Floods and Levees of the Mississippi. Ever since the first settlement of the low lands on the Mississippi river, the inhabi tants have maintained a perpetual struggle with the great volumes of water that flow from the Northwest through that country have been constructed to fence the water within the narrow limits of the channel of the river: hundreds of thousands of dollars were expended annually to protect the plantations on the banks of the stream; dams were built, cut-offs were made, bayou were closed, the outlets were dredged; in short, every expedient which theory or experience could suggest was resorted to in the tremendous efforts of the people and the States to defend their rich lowlands from the annual floods. Yet whenever the water from the Missouri and from the Ohio would meet and flood the channel of the Missis sippi the stream would rise over the banks and press against the levees with a force they could not withstand, or, failing to force a passsage, would rise over and sweep away the artificial barriers, and inundate the country, from the crevasse to the Gulf. The delta of the Mississippi, comprising the al-luvial plane from the mouth of the Ohio river to the Gulf of Mexico is 500 miles in length, varying from 25 to 150 miles in Its northern elevation is 275 fee above the level of the sea, so that the incli nation is about 8 inches per mile. The whole extent of this plane comprises an area of about 40,000 square miles.

The Mississippi river winds through this plane of its own creation, frequently press-ing against the bluffs on the east, and once, at Helena, touching the highlands on the west; and, though the delta is about 500 miles long, the channel of the river, in its course from the Ohio to the Gulf, attains a length of nearly 1,200 miles, and reduces the rate of descent to 3½ inches per mile. In low water the surface of the stream is 40 feet below the top of the natural bank, at the Ohio, and 20 feet at New Orleans; the stream flows sluggishly through this tortu-ous trench, which is 3,000 feet wide and from 75 to 120 feet deep, and discharges itself into the Gulf with an almost imperceptible cur

The water begins to rise in the autumn early in the spring the river is bank full, and in the month of May, when the waters from the spring rains and snow thaws in the Northwest, and on the tributaries of the Ohio, pour into the Mississippi, it overflows and, if unrestrained, inundates the whole plain. When the water flows over the banks, its velocity is checked by the forests and irregularties of the surface; and the vast amount of earthly matter which is borne along in the swift current is deposited, the heavier particle first, and the light, clayey matter at remoter points. The consequence is that immediate borders of the stream, which receive the heavier deposits, are raised above the level of the surface of the surrounding country; and, therefore, while the whole plain dips toward the sea at an angle of eight inches per mile, the surface inclines from the stream at an angle of three ·or four feet per mile.

In low water, the surface of the river is below the level of the lowest point of the delta, and the drainage is from the swamps toward the Mississippi; but at high water the surface of the stream is from twelve to twenty feet above the level of a great part of the land surface. So soon, therefore, as the waters rise over the banks, they rush down the plane at right angles to the course of the channel, fill the swamps, and inundate the country.

It is estimated that about sixteen million acres of the most fertile and productive lands of the States of Missouri, Arkansas Mississippi and Louisiana are subject to overflow. To protect these lands from the annual devastation by the waters has been the object of incessant toil and immens outlays of capital by the inhabitants of the Valley of the Mississippi. So early as 1840, Congress made an appro priation for the construction of a chart of the "Hydrographical Basin of the Mississippi," which was executed by J. N. Nicollet, in the employ of the United States To pographical Bureau.

In 1850, a corps of engineers was organized under Captain, now General A. A. Humphrey, which made a thorough survey of the delta with special reference to the discovery of some system of works by which the country could be protected from overflow. These observations were made during and subsequent to the great flood of

The constant increase of the volume of the flood revealed by each successive rise, is as-cribed by Capt. Humphrey in his report to the superior drainage produced by the cultivation of the country on the upper tributa-ries of Mississippi, whereby the waters are thrown more rapidly into the main channel; the leveeing of the river and its tributaries in the States above Louisiana, so as to prevent the escape of the waters into the swamps and lowlands whence it would be gradually drained to the river; the construc-tion of cut-offs, the shortening of the channel, and more rapidly conveying the water to points below; and the lengthening of the delta, thus extending the level month river so that the current being retarded, the water is held back in the channel above. The remedies suggested are: Higher and stronger levees; prevention, by act of Congress, of the construction of additional cutoffs; formation of new outlets to the lake Borgne and Pontchartrain; opening of the closed bayous; enlargement of the Atcha-falaya and Bayou Plaquemine, and the creation of artificial reservoirs in the swamps, to relieve the channels of the river in extreme cases. The early settlers, who selected the more elevated and fertile lands on the banks of the river, found little difficulty in protecting themselves from the floods. The whole country was then open to the waters, and a slight embankment several inches high would turn off the water, which was drained to the lowlands further from the river, Other settlers, hawever, followed the pioneers; new plantations were established and, by independent individual action, the slight embankments became linked together for many miles along both sides of the river The waters, by reason of this confinement rose higher and every succeeding year, the mbankments were enlarged, strengthened and extended, until a line of levees, from 15 o 30 feet wide at the base, and varying in height from 5 to 20 feet, stretched, with little nterruption, from the lands on the coast, below New Orleans, along the channel of the river, to the boundaries of Tennessee and Missouri.

The system, owing to its origin, was purely a selfish one. Each settler provided for his individual protection. If by a cut-off he could drain the water from his own place and throw it on the lands below, or by closing a bayon he could reclaim additional acres, the thing was done without reference to the effect it might have on the country lower down the stream. Much damage was thus done by shortening the channel of the river and by closing some of its natural outlets to the sea The legislation of the States along the Mississippi, has been little better than the individual action. The enactments depended more upon the comparative strength of the parties to be benefited and injured than upon any well-established plan for the control of the waters. Under authority of law, the channel of the river was shortened by the construction of cuts across the narrow necks formed by the great bends so frequent in the course of the stream. Bayous, which led from the main channel of the river to the gulf, forming independent out-lets or mouths, were closed, and the water forced into one channel, which was unable carry it to the sea. Before the war, therefore, the Father of Waters had become unmanageable in the hands of those who sought to control his floods. During the war, when labor that had been forced to the task day and night and which at times was able to grapple suc cessfully with the elements, was withdrawn the waters swept away the levess at Morganzia, West Baton Rouge, at Chinn's and at Robertson's plantation, and at other points both above and below the mouth of the Red River, and inundated the country west of the Mississippi from Morganzia to Berwick's Bay.

An attempt was made during last winter to rebuild these broken embankments, Under the combined efforts of the State authorities of Louisiana and the Wa Department at Washington, a large number of laborers were employed, and the work had been so far repaired that it was believed to be sufficiently strong to resist th pressure of the flood. Many planters and men from the North, believing that these levees would be rebuilt, engaged in the cultivation of the fertile lands in the parishes of Point Coupee, West Baton Rouge, Iberville, Lafourche, Terrebonne, and parts of others that were overflowed last vear. Recent reports from Louisians bring the sad intelligence that all thes newly-constructed levees have been swep away, and that the water is rapidly filling up the swamps and spreading over the whole country, driving the homeless inhabitants before it.

It is a grave question for the consideration of the country whether Congress should not undertake the protection of the whole delta of the Mississippi against overflow. The present system, or rather want of system seems to be a failure; and, unless some such seems to be a failure; and, unless some such combination of works as is suggested by General Humphrey be adopted, planting on the fertile river lands must ever be a precarious undertaking, with the weight of the chances largely against success. The distinguished engineer who conducted the survey referred to estimated the total cost of works to protect the country from the Ohio to the Gulf at $26,000,000. The country thus reclaimed and protected The country thus reclaimed and protected would easily bear a tax of an amount sufficient to pay the interest on this sum, to keep the works in repair, and, finally, to liquidate the debt. This, like all other physical problems, must be capable of determination. The water brought down the Missis-sippi is not infinite; its quantity, its velocity, its pressure, are measurable; the height and strength of levees, and the capacity of outlet required to confine and discharge the annual floods brought down, are, therefore, determinable measurements. To solve the problem it is only necessary that a competent superintendent, clothed with ample authority over every portion of the territory to be protected, be charged with the task, so that the whole work may be carried on and completed in accordance with some well-established system.—N. Y. Tribune. From California. SAN FRANCISCO, May 31.—Piracies in Chi nese waters still continue. Six hundred and fifty Chinese emigrants, on the ship Napo-leon, mutinied and set the ship on fire. The captain and crew escaped in small boats.

The pirates attacked the ship Mahee, on

"The Original American Deodorsizer and Disinffectant."

This stricte owes its peculiar value as a Deodo-Rizer to the fact that it decomposes and destroys all noxious gases and vapors that are given off from putrifying animal or vegetable matter

This opinion is concurred in by Drs. Millenberger, Johnson, Chew, McSherry, Butler, and Dr. Van Biber, who made the report to the National Sanitary and Quarantine Convention of 1859, says:
