The young The young king fell in love sometimeago with Richard Wagner, who writes mawith Richard Wagner, who writes mu-sicoo the future, a tempo that is rather perplexing to musicians of the. present time. The eccentricic composer, in fresent aborbed somuch of the time of the youthful monarch, thatit became neche sary to remove him, and be he was sent away from Munich, with orders not to return. But LudwigtheSecond hasbeen pining for his Wagner, and the war alarm has not served to distract his not served to distract his houghts from the loss of fis sriend. He has passed his time in writing sentimental poetigal lam laments, playing Wagner's music on io pianionotre, and going off on boltiary in-cognit walks among his people, or in the country and the country ground Munich. Mis ministers have thu been obliged to mort the business of diplomangy and pork inces without the sanction of the head of the State, and consequently things have been all at sixes and sevens. The ides of such a trivial subject as a European war interfering with his kingly prerogawar interfering with his kingly prerogative of writing poetry and playing the piano, is monstrous to him. piano, is monstrous to him.
The other day the Bavarian Parli ment was to be opened, and the ee mony was to be performed by the King in person. But hedetermined not to be thus bored, and disappear thus bored, and disappeared from his capital mysteriousty, on the every day appointed. There was great consternation tion among ministers and courtiers, and his mother, the Queen Dowager, was
