CITY BULLETIN.

THE BROAD STREET IMPROVEMENT.—Another meeting of the joint committee of citizens and City Councils relative to the improvement of Broad street, was held last evening. On behalf of the Committee of Citizens, Mr. Kneass made a report to retain the present width of the street, and to macadamise the centre of street to the width of 31 feet south of Washington avenue, to League Island, and 27 feet north of Willow street. Each side of this road to be paved with cobble stones or granite blocks, if the property owners shall so determine. The cost of the proposed improvement is estimated as follows: From Moyamensing road to Washington street, cost to property owners, $76,300; to city, $13,200, from Willow street to Columbia avenue, cost to property owners, $50,350; to city, $10,700; Germantown avenue to Fisher's lane, $93,800 to property owners, and $12,600 to city, making a total cost of $224,450 to the property owners, and $36,500 to the city.

The Committee on Councils, after some discussion, agreed to the proposition, and will report the same to councils for their action.

THE FOURTH OF JULY CELEBRATION.—Subscriptions are solicited to procure uniforms for Company E, 192d Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, who are about to reorganize, and intend participating in the celebration on the coming 4th of July. The officers intend to make this Company a permanent organization, and to attach it to Colonel Wm. B. Thomas's Regiment, which is now re-organizing.

ALLEGED HORSE THIEF CAPTURED.—Robert Hastic was arrested yesterday by Sergeant Crout and Officer De Haven, of the Reserve Corps, upon the charge of the larceny of a horse, valued at $750, and a wagon worth $450, the property of Mr. E. S. Green, of Long Branch, N. J. The team was recovered at the Continental stables where it had been offered for sale for $1,000. Hastic was committed this morning. He acknowledged the theft.

FATAL RESULT OF SHOOTING.—John Marley, who was shot in the back on the 1st, in Bedford street, died yesterday at the Pennsylvania Hospital. Thomas Roach, who is alleged to have fired the shot is in custody. He claims that the shooting was accidental, but Marley stated, soon after the occurrence, that the affair resulted from an old grudge. Coroner Taylor will investigate the case to-day.

THE NORTHERN TOUR.—We call attention to the advertisement of Mr. N. Van Horn, passenger agent, No. 425 Chestnut street. Passengers have the choice of several routes, the rates of fare being very low.

END OF THE FENIAN WAR.—The campaign in Canada of the Fenian Brotherhood appears to have come to an end and the brethren are travelling back to this side of the Canada line as fast as possible. Their movements appear to be as energetic and earnest as those of the customers of the eminent coal dealer, W. W. Alter, 957 North Ninth street, and at Sixth and Spring Garden streets.

FROM JAMES MAIRS, M. D., 35 Clinton Place, New York.—"DEAR SIR: For some time past I have been making use of your Sozodont. At the time I began to use it, my gums were very tender and painful to the touch, and had been so for a very considerable length of time. After using the Sozodont a few times, they were entirely relieved, and have remained so ever since. I consider the Sozodont the most convenient, efficient, saunfactory and pleasant dentifrice in use—indispensable to all well regulated toilets. Yours, etc., most respectfully."

AMUSEMENTS.

The patrons of the Walnut had a grand treat last evening in the personation of Sir Giles Overreach, in "A New Way to Pay Old Debts," by Mr. Edwin Booth. It was most admirable, and the company gave most capital support. To-night Mr. Booth repeats "Hamlet." Miss Ettie Henderson appears in "Satan in Paris" and "The Bonnie Fish Wife" at the Arch this evening. At the American a bill full of variety will be given to-night. Signor Blitz appears to-night at Assembly Building.

Billings on Bad Spelling.

A private letter by "Josh Billings," the philosopher who spells so badly, says:

"Bad spelling is just what I do not take any more pride in than I should in stuttering, but I was led into it by an experiment, and confirmed in it by success. I wrote my first effort about six years ago, and it grew out of an adventure with a silvery-knobbed and genial old trout-fisher who had thrashed many a stream with me. We were fishing a brook thick on the banks with alders, and were using small reels to give our lines the privilege of going far down the water among the coverts and windings. I stood beside the old sport while his reel was unwinding, and already he had let out at least one hundred feet of line. We were fishing without any lead, with full worm bait, and near to the barnyard of a farmhouse, which was enclosed with a fence, taking in a bend of the brook, for the beasts to drink at, and for the ducks and geese to dabble in. The line having no sinker, the bait, being large and lively, floated on the stream. Old Nestor's bait had got into the duck pond and, swimming along on the top of the water, attracted the appetite of a fine young gosling, who, without any further invitation, gorged the deceit and gave to the line just the kind of signal that a large trout would give. The old man's eyes grew crazy at the pull and slowly up the brook's course he began to reel the prize. It was most exciting, Nestor declaring that he had got the monarch of the brook; but at last, when the gosling, weighing at least six pounds, hove in sight around the sudden curve of the bank just below us, and was safely hauled up on the sand at Uncle Isaac's feet, it would have made a graven image grow limber and laugh to look into that fine old fisherman's face and see the surprise and fun mixed up together. This adventure has one striking peculiarity, and that is, it was literally gosling true. I never, in the whole course of my somewhat variegated life, was so completely straugled with laughter, and have lamented my ability to give the scene, on paper, so little of the cachinatory throes that it raised in me at the time. The next day I wrote this episode up, and with a blush deposited it in the post office for our newspaper editor, with the nom de plume "Stedlength." It was hatched out in a few days, and I saw myself, at full length, in the columns of the little daily. I was about half mad and half tickled, but these sensations, after I had read the thing, gave way to disgust. But reading no criticisms unfavorable to my piece, I was nerved up to the phrenzy of seeing my pen and ink once more in the journal, and, for about a year, was on parade at least three times a week. * * * * Thus far, I had written with dictionary and spelling-book in hand. I had never seen a single one of my pieces copied into another paper, and this was not as flattering as it might be. About this time I had read an effusion by "Artemus Ward," upon some subject upon which I had written myself, and I was foolish enough to fancy that mine was almost second to his. Acting upon that fancy, I took my piece and drew it off again, paying but little attention to good and correct spelling, using a phonetic style, and sent the waif to a New York paper. When the piece had been rewritten, without any thought and without any reason for it, I wrote involuntarily at the bottom, "Josh Billings." In a few days I saw the old acquaintance with the harlequin clothes on, and in a few more days, the comic papers engaged the services of the new comer, and gave him position. Thus were all the pieces (which never had merit enough, in citizen's dress, to merit recognition), by being daubed with a painted vest, handed over to the tender mercies of notoriety. This is the account of my bad orthography, and the only excuse I have to offer for ever adopting it.

A French Tulip Show.

"Spiridion's" last Paris letter says: I have been to the tulip show which is now open. You can imagine from my confession of weakness for garish colors I am an ardent amateur of flowers. I am an admirer of tulips, although their want of perfume makes me sometimes compare them to beautiful women whose beauty lacks that witchery which oft endows homeliness of features with fascination—expression. Your flower which breathes no portion of its soul to its admirer is dumb. But the dainty colors and their exquisite mingling in the flower of the tulip, the beautiful form of the flower and of the leaves which compose it, its delicate stalk and graceful attitude and the almost plaintive appeal its fragility makes for protection al. lure my admiration. I question if Holland could make such a show as we have here now. It contains two thousand five hundred plants all now in flower, and seven hundred varieties. It belongs to the city of Paris. I will tell you its history. Last year there died at Versailles a Mons. Bonous. He was wealthy and he had no occupation. He had the good sense to discover no son of Adam, whatever his wealth may be, can live listlessly under pain of the greatest unhappiness. It is better to chase the horizon than to do nothing; for the consummate art of life is healthily to shorten it; to give swiftest wings to those hours—and such are all hours—which are to bring Death unto us. He winged her hours with tulips. He determined to collect in his garden at Versailles all species of tulips. Having placed the goal of his ambition at so great a distance, he made it necessary for him to run with all his speed if he would reach it before Death attained him. While I think life and fortune might be more worthily employed, for instance by collecting the last tears from sorrow's eyes or the last rags worn by deserving paupers, I cannot commend Mons. Bontous's taste and patience. Think of a man tending inodorous, dusky, apparently dead bulbs for weeks and months, taking care of them, waiting for the day of their life to come—and when life returns, or rather becomes visible, they riot in color and form, they fill his garden with the brightness of twenty suns, the beauty of a hundred rainbows—and, their brief day ended, they droop and return to sleep again. There is something magical, fairy-like, in these periodical slumbers and wakings of an immense collection of flowers. Mons. Bontous spent twenty-five years in assembling all these plants. He visited England, Holland, Belgium to obtain new species or varieties. He died last year and provided in his will the collection should be given with all the pots, boxes, labels—in fine with everything—to the public establishment which might prove to the satisfaction of his executors worthiest to possess it. The Garden of Plants, the Acclimation Society, and the city of Paris laid claim to it in the conditions of the will. It was awarded to Paris. The municipal authorities have an extensive collection of green houses and a large garden at Passy, which is the nursery of the flowers used to decorate the squares and gardens. The city owns another nursery of three or four hundred acres near Joinville-le-Pont, where the shrubs and trees used to decorate the city are protected and fostered.
