Utopia in Wisconsin.

The following delightfully refreshing item of intelligence appears in a Western exchange:

"Week before last the local election in the town of Plover, Wisconsin, should have taken place, but it was entirely forgotten and thus neglected."

By consulting our Gazeteer we find that this charming retreat was settled in the days of General Jackson. The Wisconsin river rolls by the enchanted village, bearing innumerable rafts of lumber, and dense forests of pine encircling the place with a great shadow. In 1863 there were three hundred Plovers in the village, two hotels, and two stores. The Gazetter is entirely silent about the progress of the town since the date mentioned, and we are left to conjecture that the two taverns still keep up a generous rivalry, and that the village quidnuncs read their almanacs and discuss the weather and the crops about the huge winter log, or bask under the trees in summer, with that perfect peace of mind which is unknown in the crowded marts of civilization.

We are reluctant to forsake this idyllic spot. There must be some amazing good traits about a village that forgets its local elections. We find ourselves wondering whether the politicians in Plover were killed off by the cold weather or scared off by the drafts. May be the treasury of Plover is out of cash. Surely some one aspires to be constable or town clerk, alderman, burgess or treasurer. We cannot believe that a printing press has found its way to the pine woods, or the local elections would not have thus gone by default. What good, easy souls the Ploverians must be. We warrant that fat men predominate. Supposing the thermometer at 90° and no dyspeptic editor on hand to stir up commotion, we may dimly comprehend how it was thought best not to have the "bother of an election."

We wonder if the Ploverians ever execute notes of hand? They evidently "make no note of time." How could one of these imperturbable good fellows remember when a bill fell due? We doubt whether a grocer has balanced his books since the days of General Jackson. The Gazetteer does not inform us whether there is a church in the town, but of what use would such an institution be: The people would never know when Sunday came. Indeed every day in the grand shadow of those pine woods is Sunday. The dappled deer from the edge of the forest watches the rival landlords take their morning bitters, and the turtles lazily dream away their lives within a half dozen yards of the spot where the village urchins play marbles. Moreover, if the Ploverians were, by a prodigious effort, to get into a church, the sexton would forget to awaken them, and they might sleep on until the "crack of doom." As to taking up a collection for the benefit of the pastor (if they had one) who would venture upon such an expenditure of locomotive energy? No. It is better that there is no church in Plover. It would only become a rendezvous for opossums and owls.

Happy Ploverians! They have escaped all the mental throes and exacerbations of the reconstruction question, for they have never heard of such a question. They are not agitated about the cholera, for the pestilence could never find such an out of the way place. They will never know what a narrow escape Canada has just made, until the year 1870, when some forlorn stranger, put off by a steamboat captain for want of funds at the place, shall tell them that he was a Fenian, and explain to them how the Scythians under Fenius settled in Egypt a thousand years before Christ, and how in 1866 they drove the "Queen's Own" at Ridgeway. Macaulay's fisherman, who is to sketch the ruins of London from a convenient bridge will emigrate from Plover. We are not sure that the Last Man whom the poet sings about, will not hail from Plover. Who would waste time under the silent columns of Karnak, when he could live forever amidst the beatitudes of Plover. We quit the subject with a sigh.—Pittsburgh Chronicle.

The Publishers of Leipsic.

A letter from Germany says:

"I have taken advantage of my stay in Leipsic to make some inquiries into the extent of the book business here, the most important single element of the trade of this place. Everybody knows that Leipsic is one vast book store, but few would believe that the traffic can be conducted in the entirely quiet way in which it is. No place exhibits less books than this. Walking along the streets it is true you see on almost every block the word 'Buchhandlung' in unobtrusive letters, but very rarely any display of publications in the shop windows. In company with an English friend I called at one of the largest houses to procure a work published there. We went up a narrow and dark flight of stairs, at the top of which was a locked door. In this was a small window, as large as a small pane of glass, and through this opening we gave our order and soon received the book wanted.

"I had occasion to go to the house of Tauchnitz, known to all the world by his Collection of British Authors. We went through an arch into a large court, and, after inquiring of a cook in a white cloth cap, we were directed to a flight of stairs, at one side of which were the words, in letters not more than two inches high. 'Tauchnitz, up one flight of stairs.' We went up, and came into the most quiet of offices, where three or four clerks were writing. One or two copies of their publications were on the counter, but that was the only sign of a bookstore that we perceived. Mr. Tauchnitz instantly came in and answered my questions. He preferred to speak English rather than German, although he is by no means a master of our tongue.

"It is just so with all the great houses of Leipsic. Even Brockhaus's establishment, the largest book publishing house in the world, makes no show of its greatness, and although in the double square which its buildings compass it is impossible to conceal the extent of the premises, still there is not the faintest approach to the splendor of the palaces of Harper, Appletons and Lippincott.

"Brockhaus's is the only instance in the world, so far as I know, of a house which is comple in itself. He even goes so far as to cast his own types and to manufacture his own machinery. He publishes all kinds of books, and such is his knowledge of the trade that almost everything with his name upon it has a good sale. The greatest undertaking which he is now carrying on is the new edition of the Conversations Lexicon, a work which even takes precedence of the American Cyclopedia. Brockhaus has an immense antiquarian department, a retail department—embracing in English books alone an assortment larger than many of the London or New York shops, an engraving department for both maps and pictures, a school-book department, and one of miscellaneous literature, excluding not a single class of works which are in popular demand. The whole business has grown up during more than a half a century, and is now so thoroughly organized as to almost manage itself. The founder is not living, and a Brockhaus of the third generation is now beginning to take the business into his own hands, although the son of the founder has not relinquished the nominal control of the establishment."

The Expected Embarrassments of Foreign Travel.

A correspondent, writing to an English paper from the continent, speaks as follows of some of the difficulties which tourists must expect to encounter in the event of a war with Europe:

"The continent of Europe will be shut up as completely as it was during the great wars of the Revolution and the Empire. We shall revert to the time when Sydney Smith, taking the squire's son to finish his education in Germany was driven by stress of politics to put into Edinburgh, and remained there for years. The foreign 'Bradshaw' will become a dead letter, and Murray's 'Guides' as useless as Patterson's "Book of Roads.' The Alpine Club will have to burn their Alpenstock, for Switzerland, however strongly its neutrality may be reaffirmed by the great powers, is too near the intended scene of strife to escape ultimate combustion. There will be no pleasant trips up the Rhine. As for excursions to the Saxon Switzerland or the Lake of Como, or the Tyrol—as for art trips to Munich or Dresden—these will have to be deferred until central Europe comes to its senses again. The desperate career of the German watering-places will happily be arrested for a time; the opera houses will go bankrupt, and the hotel landlords and tric a-trac sellers will be able, after a long series of years, to appreciate all the luxury of having soldiers billeted upon them, and of having to pay war taxes and subscribe to forced loans."

Most of the English people have become convinced that America is not now inhabited entirely by barbarous, roving tribes of Indians, and if what is described above actually comes to pass, we may naturally expect that many tourists, driven from their natural hunting grounds, will come over to explore the unknown regions of the United States. Let the journey once become fashionable,—and it already seems to be becoming more and more common,—and the Falls of Niagara and the Mammoth Cave will prove much stronger magnets than the Coliseum and the Mer de Glace.

WHAT CONSTITUTES A BARREL?—A question was recently decided in the Common Pleas of Erie county, Pa., which may interest some of our readers—especially those engaged in the oil business. A purchaser contracted for one hundred barrels of oil at $9 00, but sent to the well barrels which considerably overrun 42 gallons each. The producer filled 85 barrels of these, making 4,200 gallons, or one hundred barrels of 42 gallons each, but declined to fill any more. He was sued for the fifteen barrels claimed. On the trial it was claimed that the act of Assembly provided that 31½ gallons make a barrel, and that no custom, nothing but express agreement between the parties, could reckon the barrel at more. Consequently, the claimant, instead of recovering the fifteed barrels, as sued for, was compelled to account for the excess of 4,200 gallons, over 100 barrels, reckoning each barrel at 31½ gallons. The sharp practice, therefore, of some oil purchasers, who have been increasing the capacity of their barrels, will not stand a legal test. Unless they specify the number of gallons held by their barrels, they cannot recover, in a court of law, over the 31½ gallons fixed by the act of Assembly.

THE LAST GOLDEN WEDDING.—The golden wedding of the venerable Presiding Bishop of the United States, Bishop Hopkins, of Vermont, and his estimable lady, took place at the episcopal and family homestead, at Rock Point, Vermont, on the borders of Lake Champlain, last week, and continued from Wednesday evening to Friday morning. The Bishop is now in his 70th year, having been married in 1816, and both he and Mrs. Hopkins are in the most robust health. The issue of the marriage was a nice little family of thirteen, consisting of nine sons and four daughters. Of these seven sons and two daughters are now living. Members of the family are settled in Buenos Ayres, California, New Orleans, New York, and Burlington, Vt., besides other places. Five sons and sons-in-law are clergymen, three editors, one physician, one (Casper) stands at the head of the marine insurance business on the Pacific coast, and one (Jerome) has devoted himself to the art of music with a passion for which he seems to have been born. The eldest son, John Henry, is proprietor and editor of the Church Journal, one of the most able religious papers in the country.

WONDERFUL YARN.—The "local of the Wheeling Register gets off the following:—As a gentleman was passing along Fourth street yesterday, he passed a place where a number of boys were playing marbles. One of them, in shooting his marble, cleverly put it under the gentleman's foot. The gentleman slipped and tumbled against a lady, also passing, precipitating her, along with himself, upon a large hog, who was examining the gutter geographically for debris. The hog, frightened out of his propriety, bolted off, and ran between the legs of another gentleman, who, in falling, frightened a span of horses attached to a wagon in an alley. A man who was in a carpenter shop near by, was about to light a cigar, and upon starting up to see what was the matter, dropped his lighted match among the shavings, and a fire came near being originated. Thus ended this budget of accidents for the day.

THE CROPS.—In New England the crops are generally reported good; hay will be abundant, and the fruit-yield millions of dollars in advance of last year. In the South the general report is that the crops will turn out well, although in some quarters excessive rains are complained of. The wheat throughout Georgia has been harvested, and although the crop is by no means excellent, it turns out better than was anticipated some time ago. Along the lower Mississippi frequent crevasses have caused great destruction. In Southern Illinois the wheat crop is said to be a failure, but corn is promising well. In Ohio and Indiana the wheat promises very badly, but in Iowa, Wisconsin and Minnesota it is excellent. In Maryland and Pennsylvania it is only moderate.
