

BUSINESS NOTICES.

THE DIMAYED DOG-CATCHER. There was dog-catcher as bold As e'er was in that corps enrolled, Tapped a black-and-tan Unmuzzled terrier, one day, Trotting along the public way, And quick to seize him fast; But the dog's master then he saw, And started back in sudden awe, Nor dared offend a man Who in such grand apparel shone As comes from Tower Hall alone.

Oh, how now is the clothing trade? and how has it been? They say 'tis the dullest business that ever yet was seen; But customers to the "Star" will rush and come from near and far, For there's not a single law against their buying at the "Star."

GERMANY IN WAR.

German nationality has been much written about, talked about, and sung about. "What is the German Fatherland?" is the favorite national song, and its idea is that Austria, Prussia, Saxony, Bavaria, and all the other states constitute but one country, beloved by every citizen of every empire, kingdom and duchy. A war, therefore, between any two or more members of the Germanic confederation partakes of the character of a civil war. It is much more unnatural than was our late rebellion. It is as monstrous, indeed, as would be a war between Pennsylvania and New York. Unfortunately the looseness of the German confederate system, and the impotence of the Federal Diet, as a supreme central authority, must always make wars between the different states possible.

The Germans in America find themselves involved in a conflict of feeling in regard to the war that has just begun. Although they are American citizens, and generally very good and valuable ones, they still feel a pride in calling themselves Germans, seldom choosing to be designated as Prussians, Austrians, Saxons or as natives of any of the other States. They have a certain lingering love for German nationality, and it is a grief to them to find this idea broken up rudely by a war. Yet, after all, it is the representative body of German nationality that is responsible for the present war. The Federal Diet, interfering in the Danish Duchies, and authorizing "Federal execution" there, really struck the first blow of the present war. That execution was expected to work equally to the advantage of Prussia and Austria, and generally to the whole confederation. It was a wicked and mean spoliation of a weak power, which, in the hour of its distress, was abandoned to its fate by France, England and the other powers on whose friendship it had a right to rely.

The policy of Prussia, under the present king, and with Bismark as Prime Minister, has always been aggressive. They have visions of a great German Empire, of which the Prussian monarch shall be the Emperor, and Berlin the capital. If this idea could be fulfilled honorably, it would not be unacceptable to the great body of Germans. Austria has a like ambition, but its character is not exclusively German in its character. Its territory is inhabited by various nationalities, and its reigning house is unpopular except in a part of Austria proper. The German people would never consent to be united into one nation under the House of Hapsburg. If the present conflict, therefore, should result in favor of Prussia, and enable her to absorb some or all of the minor states, it would probably be an advantage to all in the future, and would so be acknowledged in a short time.

But after all, there remains to be considered and remembered the wicked and unwarrantable proceedings, two years ago, which have led to the existing conflict. Both Prussia and Austria have forfeited the sympathy of liberal people everywhere by their ungenerous conduct towards Denmark, and American citizens, of native birth, cannot all make up their minds as to which power they would like to succeed. The chief circumstance that inclines them to favor Prussia is that if she triumphs, Italy is likely to triumph also, and to free Venetia from the detested rule of Austria. The Americans do sympathize with Italy, and they will extend their sympathy to Prussia as her ally. They never did like Austria, and they like her less now that an Austrian prince has the effrontery to establish himself as a monarch on American soil. The discomfiture of Austria in the war just begun will probably be followed by the downfall of Maximilian and his sham empire. Therefore, although we may deplore the war, we can, with very good reason, wish for the defeat of Austria.

YANKEE GRAVES. Mr. Harris, the rebel Congressman from Maryland, has sorely troubled his own camp by his rampant speech of Thursday last. He has so frightened his colleagues out of their ordinary propriety that his congressional allies in Washington and his journalistic allies here and elsewhere are making haste to wash their hands of this most indiscreet old man, who "talks out in meeting" sentiments which the better trained partisan of the South reserves for anonymous journalism or for the utterances of private-dinner parties at a Democratic club. Mr. Harris's speech is very differently reported in different papers. The statement of it generally circulated at the North and that given in the Washington papers are unlike in many essential points, but both agree in their display of a bitter malignity of feeling towards the Union and towards the North that is scarcely equaled by the most rampant rebel in the South. There is a passage in this speech, as it appears in the National Intelligencer, which is a particularly strange specimen of the animus of this harangue. Referring to the policy of a majority of the House, he said: "But there is something in the spirit of the Southern people which will thwart your designs. If they have lowered the standard of their Confederacy, they have not lowered the standard of their pride—a becoming pride in the estimation of an honorable enemy. The Southerner has around him, without speaking of the merits of the late contest, tokens of the endurance, courage, and prowess of his people. Sad spectacle though it be, it will not diminish his tone that he can on his own soil walk over the graves of nearly three hundred thousand of his courageous enemies; and standing on the Yankee's grave, he will not deem himself a slave."

It argues badly for the chances of speedy re-admission to Congress of Southern representatives, that those who already disgrace its floor have learned so little humility or moderation from the teachings of the war. It is a shocking spectacle to witness, when a member of Congress, sworn to uphold the government and Constitution of the United States, thus publicly and shamelessly gloats over the recollection that three hundred thousand of the brave soldiers of the Republic sleep in graves over which the Southerner may tread with pride, and to which he points as proofs of Southern prowess. It is easy to see the spirit of inextinguishable hate with which Mr. Harris rejoices over these "Yankee graves," and we do not wonder that those who, throughout the war, went hand-in-hand with this miserable traitor, shrink away, shocked and disgusted with such an indecent exhibition of disloyalty and savage spite. They have not objected to fraternize with Mr. Harris, so long as he reserved such exhibitions for the select circles of the faithful Democracy; but when he breaks into the public arena, with his four-mouthed treason, they will have none of him.
