resolution in reference to it: Resolved, That the communication of the Secretary of the Treasury, just announced to the House, be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, with instructions to inquire fully into all the facts and statements therein contained; and that the committee also inquire whether any gold has been purchased for the Treasury since the 1st of January, 1865, the amount of such purchase, by whom and of whom made, the amount of premium paid, and the compen-sation allowed to the person acting for the Government. Also, that the Committee re-port the dates and amounts of the several sales of gold made since the first day of January, 1866; the names of the purchasers, the amount purchased by each, the time of purchase, and all the circumstances attending such purchases, and the amounts paid the agent of the Treasury; that the Committee have power to send for persons and papers, and shall report the result of the incommittee that the committee quiry hereby directed, with such recom-mendation as may be deemed proper for the interests of the Government. The Speaker said that in view of the importance of the resolution, which would probably give rise to debate, he would take the responsibility of withdrawing the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, so that it might be presented and the resolution of fered to-morrow in a full House.

Our Harbor Defences. The Secretary of War sent to the Senate, in answer to a resolution of the 15th inst. a communication from the Secretary of the Navy covering the report of the joint board of army and navy officers relative to harbor

The Board consists of Rear-Admirals C. H. Davis and J. A. Dahlgren, Captain James Olden, United States Army; Brevet Major-General J. Y. Barnard, Z. B. Tower and B. S. Alexander. Secretary Welles favors the continuance of the investigation and further discussion of the questions which the invention and experience of the war have brought for solution. These inventions, he assumes, have occasioned discussion and experiments abroad, and produced many publications upon the art and implements of offensive and defensive warfare. He sug-President. The Board considered the three subjects of iron-clad vessels, channel obstructions and torpedoes. Concerning the first named, they are asked to settle approximately the character and number of these vessels necessary as land batteries for har-

They do not undertake a final solution of the problem of harbor defence, but are agreed that upon iron-clads our method of defence must be based particularly where the channels are wide and the objects to be protected are of vital importance. They consider it doubtful whether the destructive effect of modern artillery has kept pace with the invulnerability of iron-clad ves-sels moving at a high velocity, and that there is danger that one or more of such vessels might succeed in passing between forts and shore batteries, and that, therefore, a system of obstructions may be necessary for defence. They say it is to be regretted that Fort Richmond, in New York harbor, and Fort Delaware, in Delaware bay, which were built after prolonged ex-periments, were rendered valueless by immediately succeeding developments in the power of artillery.

The report says, further, "It is believed that guns have now reached their maximum limit of power, at least for naval use, and that experiments are indispensable to determine the resistance of our most recent works, and the best method of future construction, for neither the protracted experiments in England against iron targets, nor those made by our Navy Department, throw much light upon these subjects, being made with other objects.

The question of the efficiency of channel The question of the endlendy of channel obstructions, the report says, seems to be still in dispute. While admitting that they have proved failures, as undertaken by the French, for instance, in the roadstead of the island of Aix, they credit the failure to their being attempted on the spur of the moment, without preliminary study or experiment.

The boarding torpedoes were used successfully during the late war in defences of harbors and rivers upon our Southern coast. The most success was attained by sensitive percussion fuses, or some simple mechanism so arranged as to produce explosion by contact with the vessel passing over them. Probably the most certain means of exploding torpedoes would be hy the use of the galvanic battery.

Trough we have derived a knowledge of torpedoes from the rebels, this knowledge is very limited. Before they can be successfully employed in channel defence a series of experiments will be necessary to ascertain the best manner of constructing them to avoid leakage, the best material for fuses, and their arrangement in connection with the battery wires, and to test various methods or anchoring them in rapid cur-

National Banks in the South. Representative Buckland to-day, from the Committee on Banksand Banking, reported back the resolution of the House, inquiring whether any National banks in the South had had preference over banks in other States in the preparation and delivery of circulation, with a letter from H. R. Hulburd, Deputy Controller of the Tressury, in which the following statement is made:— On the 15th of September, 1885, there were six National Banks organized in the Southern States which had received no circulation, viz.:—Two banks in Alabama, two in North Carolina, one in Georgia, and one in Virginia. It was represented by the parties interested in the institutions, particularly by John Wilkes, Esq., a son of Commodore Wilkes, and President of the First National Bank of Charlotte, N. C., bat that section of the country was entirely destitute of currency; that large amounts of cotton, tobacco and other produce were lying idle for the want of money to move them and that there was much suffering in conquence. Believing the country needed these products, and knowing that prece-dence in the preparation of circulating notes had been granted to the Wisconsin National banks, at the time their circulation was driven out of existence by the circulation of the Chicago and Milwaukee banks, I instructed the engravers to reduce the time required to prepare the notes for banks in the Southern States from four months, the ordinary time, to three months, thus giving the Southern banks thirty days pro-ference. When the order was given the Continental Bank Company were delivering notes of the denomination of $5 at the rate of five banks per day.

"The American Bank Note Company were delivering notes of the denomination of $10 and $20, at the rate of three banks per day, from which it will appear, and the American Bank Note Company have so informed me, that the precedence thus given would not and did not delay the preparation of notes for any other bank in its regular order more than two days. It is proper to state that this action was taken in the absence of Mr. Clark, the Controller, and that sub sequently when the order was brought to his notice it was countermanded."
