One Henry Augustus Stoneall, office agent on the line between, New York and Washington, was indicted in J anuary last, by the Grand Jury of the United States District Courtat Trenton, N. J., for stealing lettens money. The case came on for trial on Weddessay last, when, to the surprise of everyb of everybody, a full pardon, signed by the Prevident and Secretary Seward, was presented, and the defendant was 'anconditionally discharged. The was pardon recites that the President was "assured by many respectable citizens that the circumstances of the case made the de fendant a proper object of clemeney." This business of pardoning indicted persons before trial is a bad one persons before trial is a bad one. No casisis known where the accused was a poor man and without the influence of "respectable citizens." Stoneall is said to have rich and influential conneetions in New York and Brooklyn. But this is an aggravation of his giit and not an extenuation. The law ehould bave be its should have been allowed to take and coure, and then, if the defendant were convited were convicted, the President might, under proper representations; have exercised his cised his perogative of paranoning. But we presume Mr. Stoneall and his influential friends are, or have promised to be, warm supporters of Preident Johnson's "policy"," and he is, therefore, regarded as "a proper object of executive clemency," and is not to be subjected to the humiliation of trial, however guilty may have been.
