The Conflagration at Virginia City

From Harrisburg. HARRISBURG, June 28.—A special telegraph despatch from this city to a Philadelphia morning paper, misstated the facts connected with the preparation of a history of the Pennsylvania regiments during the late

The despatch stated that Samuel H. Bates had been selected to prepare that history. This is an error, as Samuel B. Thomas, formerly deputy Secretary of the Commonwealth, and for three years past the special military aid of Governor Curtin, has been detailed to get up this history, Mr. Bates having been selected to assist Mr. Thomas in gathering local history, and following up the details of the record. Mr. Thomas has had under his especial charge the records from which this history is to be mainly made up, and is withal eminently qualified by education, sound judgment and impartial independence for the task.

It is finally announced that of the late Pennsylvania Reserve corps, about 10,000 claims of privates are yet unpaid. The great majority of these privates either fell in battle, perished in hospitals, or have died since the close of the war. The money is due to the families of such as well as to the soldiers who have survived the contest.

State Treasurer Kemble, who is President of the Board of Claims, is desirous that these accounts shall be settled, and has ordered blanks to be printed, which will be forwarded to all soldiers of the reserve corps. as well as to the widows of such as have perished, immediately on their application by letter to the Board of Claims, at Harrisburg. It is well enough to have it distinctly understood that it is unnecessary to employ any agent for the collection of their claims. as it requires no legal ability to do so. The necessary blanks and instructions will be furnished, on application to the Board of Claims, to all claimants. It is especially desired that the press throughout the country will give these facts a prominent place in their columns, for the benefit of soldiers, and the protection of the widows and orphans of soldiers.

EUROPEAN AFFAIRS.

The Emperor Napoleon's Letter—The Wa<sup>r</sup> in Germany-French Policy in Mexico --- Speech of Jules Favre--- Castigation of the Government.

[Correspondence of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin Paris. Friday, June 15, 1866.—The letter of the Emperor Napeleon to M. Drouyn de Lhuys, which was published on Friday evening last, (just too late for my own letter of that day,) has formed the main subject of comment ever since. With respect to American opinion in Paris as regards this document, I think I may venture to say that we universally consider it to be one of those "candid" declarations for which the impe-

"candid" declarations for which the imperial author is already so famous, and which, while professing to tell us everything, tell us in reality nothing, or very little.

The Emperor Napoleon appears, indeed, to bind himself to a great many things—to a peaceful policy, strict neutrality, abstention from all designs of territorial aggrandizement—and he would fain make us believe that he really did so bind himself. But when we come to examine closely into what he says, we find he has left himself so many loopholes of escape, that, like a slippery eel as he is, there is no obligation imposed out of which he cannot wriggle himself if he please, and if his policy requires it. Thus, when he abjures "territorial agit. Thus, when he abjures "territorial ag-grandizement" he makes an exception, in case the "balance of power" in Europe should be disturbed. But he leaves himself sole judge and interpreter of this very elastic condition of re-raining from an increase of territory, and takes care not to tell us beforehand whether the acquisition of Venice by Italy or of the Duchies by Prussia, would be construed by him as falling within it, And so, again, when he declares that he does not even "dream of an extension of frontier" he is careful to add "unsion of frontier." he is careful to add. less, indeed, the neighboring populations should demand annexation with France by their own will, freely expressed;"—that is, I presume, by "universal suffrage," à la mode de France! The "attentive neutrality," in short, upon which the Emperor professes to take his stand, means nothing more than that he will be in the stand of the s abide his time and consult his own interest. Even on the momentous question as to whether France shall have to draw the sword or not in the coming struggle, the only reply he gives is that he "thinks not." The most satisfactory part of the Em-peror's letter is that in which he tells us what his ministers were instructed to ask for in the Conference had it most and as for in the Conference, had it met, and especially what they were to ask for on behalf of Italy. Here the Emperor is clear enough We should have desired, he says, that Aus we should have desired, nessys, that Austria ceded Venice to Italy for an equitable consideration. The reason he gives is as unanswerable as it is sarcastic. If Austria, he writes, in concert with Prussia and without troubling herself about the Treaty of 1852, made war upon Denmark in the name of German nationality it recomments in the table about the ality, it seems only just that she should re-cognise the same principle of nationality in Italy. There is a biting and retributive logic in the above reasoning of the Emperor Napoleon, which must make the conclusion arrived at doubly bitter to his imperial brother Francis Joseph. The evident leaning to Italy, however, which is manifested in the above document, fully confirms the statement which I recently made to you of the Emperor's sympathy and admiration for the national movement going on in that country.

Events, meanwhile, have progressed since I last addressed you. The Austrian ambassador has left Berlin, and the Prussian ambassador has been dismissed from Vianta and the progressian and the progressian for the progr enna. This has been done in retaliation for the Prussians driving the Austrians out of Holstein, and laying violent hands on their commission. This morning's telegrams bring us still graver tidings. The Diet has voted the assembling of the Federal armies without Prussia and against Prussia and the latter power has thereupon voted herself out of the Confederation, and declared the Germanic union to be at an end. She has besides seized an Austrian government courier, and taken his dispatches from him—an act which can hardly be regarded otherwise than as a commencement of hostilities. The next telegrams will probably bring us news of the advance of the Austrian army into Silesia.

The publication of the Mexican despatches, which I alluded to in my last letter, afforded a fine opportunity to the opposition in the French chamber, of which it did not fail to avail itself. M. Jules Favre, in a magnificent speech, lashed the ministers and the imperial government with the ters and the imperial government with the bitterest irony on the "success" of the Mexican policy. I never heard so severe a castigation inflicted upon a government, and upon the servile majority, which had encouraged or at least failed to control it. This then is the end of your fine schemes, exclaimed the great Republican orator, which (quoting from the former speeches of M. Rouher) were to "make the Mexican expedition the finest flower in the Emperor's crown," and the "Star of France shine with new lustre on the American continent!" Instead of such result, he said, millions had been extracted from the savings of families, to be lost in Mexican loans, bolstered up by government patronage and the temptations of the lottery system. The French indemnity, first stated at seven hundred and fifty millions, had been finally reduced to sixty millions. The French army was about to come away discomfited, and almost driven out of the country, leaving Maximilian's government in a a state of all but hopeless bankruptcy. The Minister of State and the majority winced under these bitter jibes; but M. Rouher felt all reply to be impossible in the face of facts, and was obliged to hide his face of facts, and was obliged to hide his own discomfiture, and that of his master, under the hollow adulation of a servile ma-awallow in his otherwise successful career, PROFITS OF THE COOLIE TRADE. - Letters from Havana give the last quotation for Chinese "coolie contracts" at three hundred and fifty dollars a head. This price, one would think, must leave a very large mar-gin of profit for the importers; and suggests something bearing a very considerable re-semblance to the slave trade. Very seldom do the coolies receive thirty dollars on leav-ing China, and seventy dollars will, as they are taken, more than cover the expense of one passage and of the broken rice and rot-ten salt fish on which they are fed.

jority. The Mexican expedition has been the bitterest pill which Napoleon has had to

Now, in a vessel containing one thousand coolies, like that which was burned the other day, this would leave a profit, sup-posing they all reached their destination, of $250,000, to be pocketed by the brokers, minus any expense they may be put to, in returning the coolies to China after eight or ten years' labor in Cuba. The slave trade, with all its losses by death and capture, was never so lacrative as the coolie traffic seems to be; and it is evident from the known state of China and of the Spaniards and Portuguese there, that if such sums can be made by the traffic, coolies will have to engage in it whether they will or no—if willingly, all the better; but if not, then

The Rebel Munchausen.

The London correspondent of the Boston Advertiser writes: Some of us who have been reading in Blackwood's Magazine for the past year a so-called "History of the Confederate War for Independence," have been woodering how the writer would put the conclusion. For month after month he has driven the Federal armies before him like chaft. Every meeting was a confederate victory. A handful of rebels were all that were wanted when the myriads of the North drew near. So quickly were the loyal hosts disappearing as the chapters flew by—so swiftly were the confederates awarming on to their enemy's cities—that I have thought, as I read, either he or I must be dreaming; for if he was awake then secession was triumphant after all, and the North reduced to the position of a fifth-rate power. It seems, however, by the June number, that Major Heros Von Boroke, the writer left the South and ran the blockade while the war was at its height, so that his professed his-tory of the struggle in nothing more than a sketch of the beginning of it. But the story does not amount even to that. Taken as a whole, the pages are simply written for the glorification of the author. On nearly every page we read of adventures rivaling those Munchausen. His stature is the admiration of the whole of the South, and the terror of every Yankee. Not a woman looks at him who does not straightway fall in love with Does a regiment waver-Von Borcke dashes to the front, waves his sabre, and it flies by to victory. For very dangerous service he is the first to volunteer, and though he got winged at last, for a long time scornfully rode unharmed through the Yankee forces; taking as many prisoners as he likes, and being embraced a dozen times a week by all the generals within reach. There never was such a wonderful Von. No na-tural gift denied him and the gods on his side,—he needs the bullet in his shoulder to remind him even now that he is mortal.

The South wept when he fell, and was hysterical when he departed for England. His deeds deserve to be sung by Lowell and to be engraved by Cruiksbank. STORES in Richmond, Va., that rented last year for $2,500 can now be hired for
