DOUBLE EXECUTION IN BROOKLYN. Jose Gonzales, a Spaniard, and Francisco Gene Salvador, otherwise Pellicier, borniu Barcelona, who, with a man named Viele Barcelona, who, with a man named Viele, murdered Senor Jose Garcia Otero on thigh of the 22d of November, of last year in the City Park, Brooklyn, were hanged shortly after ten o'clock yesterday, in the yard of the county jail in Brooklyn, New York. The New York Post of last eyening

It is only necessary to recapitulate brief ly that Senor Olero came from. Havana on the 15th of November, in 1865, to buy machinery for a theatre in Cardenas, and be came acquainted with Gonzales before he arrived in New York. Gonzales, who supposed Otero had six or seven the wand dollars in gold, conspired with Pellicier and with Viele, who is now under arrest, but has not been tried to rob and murder him. On the night of the 22d of November, seven days after his arrival here, he was enticed to Brooklyn, and hacked to death with razors and daggers. Pellicier was soon caught, and identified by a gash he had received on his hand, which corresponded to a cut on a glove that was found near the scene of the murder; and Gonzales was found in a house in Centre street. Viele, who was not exposed at first by Gonzales and Pellicier, both of whom maintained that they were innocent, was net arrested for several months afterwards. Three days ago the prisoner Pellicier made a full confession, and gave minute details of the manner in which Gonzales planned the murder, and in which it was finally executed by the three men.

Last night Gonzales and Pellicier ate heartily at about half past eleven o'clock, and the former went to sleep, awaking at four o'clock this morning. Pellicier remaided awake until three o'clock. During the night he spent several hours in drawing a chin and afforwards asked a person to a ship and afterwards asked a person to play a game of checkers with him. A three o'clock he retired and rose at six o'clock this morning. The last hours of both were spent in devotional exercises Gonzales was faithfully attended by Rev. Father Delawin, and Rev. Father Duran-quet ministered spiritual consolation to

The execution took place in the court yard of the jail. Excellent order was maintained within and without the building. The sidewalk opposite the jail was occupied with a crowd of persons eager to catch a glimpse of the preparations. Among the number were many women and children. The sidewalk in front of the jail was kept

Inside the building a large number of offi-cers and spectators had assembled. Tickets to witness the execution were eagerly sought for, and so earnest were the importunities to see the men hung that large num-bers of persons gained admission. The drizzling rain and the chilly atmosphere added to the gloom of the scene.

At an early hour this morning, within the jail and in the surrounding streets, there was much commotion. occasioned b the interest felt in the approaching execution. A large police force was present, under command of Inspector Folk, and Sheriff McNamee officiating, assisted by the executioner Isaacs. The scaffold was placed near the rear of the court, on the east side, a high wooden partition concealing the weights. The assemblage of spectators was orderly, yet there was a repulsive eagerness to see the condemned men, many perness to see the condemned men, many persons eagerly availing themselves of benches, stands, and fences, from which to obtain a view of the scaffold. The roof and the large windows of the jail, facing the court, were crowded with spectators. Whether by design or accident, Viele, the man who testified expires the rounders with the rounders. fied against the murderers, was allowed to witness the execution from one of the windows. At a quarter past ten o'clock the procession entered the court. Isaacs and Sheriff McNamee first entered the open space beneath the gallows, followed by the priests and Gonzales and Pellicier. The prisoners were dressed in black sack coats and panta loons. Gonzales, who was the taller and stronger of the two, was animated, and apparently had no dread of the execution. He was tall and slender, with a dark complexion and black curly hair; and the ringlets when clustered on his forehead were occasionally thrown back with a shake of the head. H preserved his composure, and as he stepped under the gallows made a casual allusion to it. Pellicier was haggard and apparently verv weak. The murderers were attended to the scaffold by Fathers Delawin, Duranquet, Cassady, Corcoran and McKinna. Gonzales and Pellicier knelt under the gallows, and Fathers Delawin and Duranquet read prayers, which were repeated by both the isoners, the latter speaking loud and quite firmly. The praying having been concluded the men rose, when an affectionate farewell of the prisoners took place. Father Duran-quet placed his arms around the head of Pellicier, and for a moment held him to his breast. He then kissed him on the forehead. Father Delawin kissed Gonzales on the cheek.

The latter was also kissed by Father Duranquet, and Pellicier by Father Delawin.

This scene appeared to have a great effect upon Pellicier, and he seemed to be growing faint. Gonzales, on the contrary, continued to display the greatest animation. He was eager to bid farewell to all who had treated kindly, and in one or two instances. bade his friends "good-bye" a second time He appeared to observe everything that was passing around him, while Pellicier was passive and faint.

Everything being in readiness, the nooses were quickly adjusted, and the condemned men, who held crosses in their hands, which they had repeatedly kissed during the ceremony, kissed them for the last time, and surrendered them to the priests. At twenty minutes past ten o'clock the black caps were drawn down over the faces of Pellicier and Gonzales by Mr. Isaacs. As the black cloth covered the eyes of Pellicier he cast a startled glance around him, and the excitement under which he was laboring caused his hands to turn blue and the veins to stand out like cords.

Gonzales, while conscious of his awful position, appeared to have nerve enough to die more calmly.

The caps were drawn down, the nooses were adjusted, the priests and officers stepped back, when isaacs tested the rope around the neck of Gonzales for the last time and then went to Polliciarite make. time, and then went to Pellicierito make a similar examination. Stepping back two paces, Isaacs then raised the left foot, and a dull sound was heard behind the wooden partition, and the two men were swinging in the air.

Both went up together, and were raised about four and a half feet from the ground. Gonzales clasped his hands in front of him and held them in that position. He struggled but very little. Pellicier died harder, and the twitchings of his body were much greater than those of his comrade.

The struggles of both men were over in about three minutes. The pulse of one ceased to beat at seven minutes and a half, and the other at eleven minutes. The bodies were lowered at about twenty-five minutes after they were hung, and Coroner Lynch held an inquest on the bodies, A verdict of death by asphyxia, caused by hanging, was ren-dered.

Just as the men were hung, a severe rain began, which drove many of the spectators from the ground. The bodies were exposed to the rain for some time, and when taken down were very wet. They were placed in two plain coffins, which bore large Roman crosses, with the names and ages of the men inscribed on them.

THE FATAL ERROR
THE SATAL ERROR.
THE FATAL ERROR.

We have it on the authority of the Edinburgh Review, that the novels of this gifted authoress were "published at the expense of the Queen." The same authority remarks. "Hence it might have been foretold, that of the various kinds of novels, the romantic and descriptive was the least repugnant to the old Spanish spirit, and that in order for a writer successfully to undertake such a novel, it would be necessary for him to have a passionate attachment to the national manners and characteristics, and a corresponding dislike to the foreign and new; such are the qualities we find united in the author of this work. The Lost Beauty is, perhaps, the finest story of the author. Its advent is a real illerary event. The most severe critics have dissected this new work, and have suphesitatingly proriained the authoress to be the "SPANISH WALTER SCOTT." Among the painters of manners, the best, without doubt, are the Spanish writers. "We are certain to find there truth, joined to a richness and piquancy of details; and above all, a spirited tone, which singularly heightens and sets off their recitals."
