Scientific Lectures.

The Franklin Institute, since its revival, inaugurated about a year since, has entered upon a work which will claim the countenance and support of all good citizens. Regarding itself as responsible not only for a diligent diffusion of scientific and mechanical information, but also for a share in the great work of moral, amelioration, it has made, and is constantly making efforts to bring before the public in a form attractive as to secure attention, those topics, which, while they interest and please all minds, at the same time elevate them, and arouse a thirst for further knowledge which must lead into fields of research full of improvement and beneficial in every respect. With this view the reading room has been furnished with every attention to comfort and convenience, and fully stocked with works of reference, scientific magazines, &c. A secretary has been engaged to be ready to give every information to those desiring it. Meetings of a most interesting character are held every month, at which all novelties in science and the arts are discussed. [Our readers are doubtless familiar with the full reports of these meetings, which are regularly published in this paper.] Lastly, popular scientific lectures are, from time to time, delivered both at the Institute and at the Academy of Music. All these things tend clearly and directly to the objects enumerated above, and all who are interested in the good of our city, and who wish well to our good city, and the progress of its manufactures, should give their cordial support to so good a work.

In our advertising columns will be found the announcement of the Institute for this Winter, including among other things the statement of four courses of lectures, the first of which, on Electricity and Light, by Prof. Morton, we judge, from a synopsis contained in a little pamphlet freely circulated by the Institute, is likely to prove a very attractive affair.

The first of these lectures will be delivered on Tuesday evening, and among the attractions enumerated is one of the largest Runkhoff coils ever made, the new and wonderful Holly Electrical machine, and an immense assortment of new electrical apparatus and experiments.

[For the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.]
The Late Italian Opera Season.
Friday evening closed the opera season of fifteen nights. M. Maretzek's company contains more fine singers, and has given us more of the opera than we have had here for a long time. Yet the season has been a failure, and we were told, at the Academy of Music, the other night, that M. Maretzek says he will never bring a troupe to Philadelphia again. Whether this be true or not, we cannot say, but we repeat that the season has been a failure, and it might be well for both M. Maretzek and our people, to consider why it has been so.

In the first place, M. Maretzek should remember that if he brings a troupe here in October, when a third of our citizens are still out of town, he cannot expect good houses. Philadelphia has no floating population of foreigners, travelers, people passing through the city, to whom the Academy of Music is merely a place of amusement, and who rush thither in sufficient numbers to fill the house at any time of the year. Some of our best artists can say whether the season last January was successful or not, and if there were many vacant seats or even much standing room, we should be glad to give with the best cast. That leads us to the second point to which we wish to call M. Maretzek's attention. Last winter, when he first brought his regular opera, almost every night for two weeks, the best singers were given the principal parts, and we were not excited by a long parade of inferior talents. Some of our best artists, which scarcely appeared afterwards in any programme. In this troupe, among the men, are two beautiful artists, Signor Ronconi and Signor Bellini, who, in the opinion of the public, are the best of the kind in the world. In the troupe, among the women, are two beautiful artists, Signor Ronconi and Signor Bellini, who, in the opinion of the public, are the best of the kind in the world.

It is not necessary to say that the troupe of Signor Ronconi and Signor Bellini, who, in the opinion of the public, are the best of the kind in the world, is a troupe of the highest quality, and that the Academy of Music, which, in the opinion of the public, is the best of the kind in the world, is a place of amusement, and who rush thither in sufficient numbers to fill the house at any time of the year.

appreciate it, and that is not done by staying away from it when it does come. In a city the size of ours, there are people enough, and there ought to be lovers of music enough, to make a good house at any season. Moreover, the habitual coldness of our audiences is enough to discourage the most self-satisfied singer. The most skillful singing, the finest piece of acting, the entrance and exit of the most popular artists, are passed over in silence, while a moving water-fall or an illuminated gallery, raises a storm of applause; and if there is an encore, it is of some familiar air, like the soldier's chorus in "Fidelio," which people like because they think they can sing it themselves, or some note, generally very improperly introduced, which startles the audience into momentary applause. Empty seats, empty signs of public approbation which will bring managers or artists to Philadelphia, will not do us any good, unless we have our noble Academy devoted exclusively to scientific, political and gymnastic performances.

AMERICAN RECONSTRUCTION.
An English Review of the Contest Between the Congress and President.

[From the London Times, Oct. 2.]
All Americans agree that there never has been in this country such a party contest as that which will make the present autumn memorable. Among the many advantages of their political system there is this drawback—writers in various countries, and almost incessant, party men feel toward each other an antipathy and vindictiveness which are scarcely to be conceived by the English public. Moreover, the quarrels, though not so bitter as those of a party, are more so, because the party men feel toward each other an antipathy and vindictiveness which are scarcely to be conceived by the English public. Moreover, the quarrels, though not so bitter as those of a party, are more so, because the party men feel toward each other an antipathy and vindictiveness which are scarcely to be conceived by the English public.

Dr. Dan Bryant, who has created quite a sensation in New York by his personation of the characters of the great statesmen of the Irish Emigration, called "Handy Andy," these favorite plays will give us a fine touch of his quality. At the Walnut Mr. Booth will have a magnificent house tonight on the occasion of his repeating a comedy, called "Found in a Four-wheel." At the American Miss Kate Fisher and El Nino Eddie appear. At the City Museum Mr. Stuart Robson begins an evening of his new comedy, "The eminent German tragedian, commencing his engagement at the Academy of Music on Wednesday evening, appearing as Shylock, Merchant of Venice."
