November in the Country.

(For the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.)

Every year has its childhood of Spring, its youth of Summer, its manhood of Autumn, and its old age of Winter, Autumn says unabridged Webster, "astronomically begins at the Equinox, when the sun enters Libra, (23 September) and ends at the winter solstice, (22 December); but in popular language, autumn comprises September, October and November." It is well to know this distinction and thus procure your family supply of winter coal or wood, astronomically, or popularly! However languages, mutually agreeing, may unite in designating Nature as female, they differ in regard to the sex of autumn quite materially. The Latin autumnus, Italian autunno, Spanish otoño, Portuguese outono, German Herbst, Bohemian podzim are all masculine; but the Polish jesień, Russian oshen', and Greek ophos are feminine, while the French automne is either masculine or feminine. If any one will shake the dust of the city from his heels this fine November day and, gun in hand and hounds at heel, will climb one of the spurs of the South Mountain overlooking the Lebanon Valley, and, arrived at Eagle or Wild Cat Head, will calmly rest and gaze wide over the valley to the Blue Mountain beyond, he will note a strongly masculine tone in our American mountains. Look at the corduroy beeches of the stable fields; the fustian jacks and waistcoats of the corn fields; the ruddy-checked hue of the foliage; and the whicker and beard look of thesecond growth of chestnut and oak trees fast losing their leaves. To get up an article on autumn for the newspaper, a man would be eccentric if he did not make the "Immortal Williams" see the music of the witness stand. So in Henry VI., part 3, act 5, scene 7, we read apropos of the season:

"I have valiant foemen, like to autumn's corn. Have we now'down, in tops of all their pride! This is the masculine view of it. But, room for the ladies! Says Cleopatra, speaking of Anthony, act 5, scene 2, "An autumn 'twas. That grew the more by reaping— and she ought to know, and probably did know, a great deal more about men and many vigor, than the modern school of swineherd poets who rhyme to the aforementioned Cleopatra. Varily the tropical-musk-and-tobacco school of rhymer are by no means Spartan with their pens. As you sit high up there in the eagle's eyrie, you see far down in the valley the locomotive whirling along a train of passenger cars bound to Lebanon and Harrisburg. It is one of the branch roads of one of Pennsylvania's strongest supporters, the Reading railroad; and when you think of the immense iron mines lately begun to be developed along this Lebanon Valley, you can see a future state of opulence for this railroad now almost impotent to imagine. The three million tons of coal carried over the Reading road in 1885, and the million and a half of passengers, seems gigantic business enough; but what will this be when the population of our country doubled, the iron interest shall be fully developed and find its way to our Philadelphia market?

Along this range of the South Mountain, and not a dozen miles from this Eagle Head, lie the iron ore hills of Cornwall, Lebanon county. Even now their only partial work enables the miners—the Colemans and Grubbs—to excavate and send away nearly a quarter of a million tons of iron ore yearly. In every direction the geologist finds traces of the ore, and year by year enterprising men are developing new mines, and starting new furnaces, along the mountain sides of Lebanon Valley. It seems almost fabulous to read the accounts of the rapid development of the coal mines of our State, and as attention is more and more awakened to the iron mines, the more will their riches be developed. The Reading road has already carried, up to November 1, this year, 662,914 tons more coal than it did last year at the same time, and Philadelphia has waxed fat accordingly. Is it any wonder that Reading railroad stock is now worth $58, when it could have been bought some years ago for $6?

If we only had one-hundredth part the talent of our New York friends for working Thanksgiving in Pennsylvania.

In the name and by the Authority of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, Andrew G. Curtin, Governor of said Commonwealth:

Whereas, it is a proclamation of the good and worthy custom of the Commonwealth to set apart, annually, a day for the special acknowledgment of the goodness of the Almighty God our Father, Creator, Preserver and Father of the whole people, at one time, and with a common voice, the THANKS and PRAISE which throughout the year are springing from the hearts of His people;

I, ANDREW G. CURTIN, Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, do, by this my Proclamation, recommend that the people of the Commonwealth observe Thursday, the 20th Day of November next, as a day of Thanksgiving and Prayer, and that they assemble in their respective churches, and places of worship, and make their humble thank-offering to Almighty God for all His blessings during the past year.

For the thus far continued activity of industry;

And, moreover, that they do beseech Him to continue unto us His merciful blessing, and to confirm the hearts of the people of these United States, that by the lawful force of their will, deeds of Good, Justice, Wisdom and Charity may be done.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State, at Harrisburg, this third day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six, and of the Commonwealth the ninety-first.

SURVEY OF THE SANDUSKY RIVER.—The survey of the Sandusky river has been continued until it reaches the mouth of the river, to make an estimate of the cost of improvements, upon which to found an application for an appropriation from the government. The survey has demonstrated that there is a greater depth of water in the river than was supposed. With the exception of the bar at the mouth, and two or three smaller ones, the river is navigable for a distance of water in the river is twenty feet. There are places where its over thirty feet deep. The estimate of the cost of improvement has not been made yet.

One of LEBANON VALLEY MACHINES worked very well, but it went AT HALF PAST, to make room for the "Willcox & Gibbs."
