YESTERDAY'S VICTORY.

The loyal North achieved another great triumph yesterday. Ten, at least, of the twelve States in which elections were held have been carried by decisive majorities, and several of them under circumstances peculiarly gratifying.

New Jersey has done magnificently. The Republicans have made almost a clean sweep of the State, carrying both Houses of Legislature, and four out of five of the Congressmen, defeating the notorious Copperhead, "Jack" Rogers, and securing an additional United States Senator.

Illinois has maintained her high reputation, and shows heavy Republican gains all over the State. She elects the gallant Logan for her Congressman at large, by 40,000 majority, and sends the same overwhelmingly Republican delegation to Congress as before.

Wisconsin rivals Illinois in loyal emulation, rolling up nearly 20,000 Union majority, and re-electing her five loyal Congressmen by increased majorities.

Missouri has done an admirable work, in defeating Judge Hogan in the First District, and sending a gallant and loyal soldier to Congress in his place. Judge Hogan has made himself conspicuous as an advocate of "My Policy," and his decided defeat is the more significant from the intimate way in which he has identified himself with Mr. Johnson's fortunes.

Minnesota is not behind her elder sisters of the Northwest, electing her whole ticket by 9,000 majority, and sending back her two good men and true to the next Congress, with a most emphatic endorsement.

Kansas also records her verdict against the President's suicidal policy, and the Republican ticket is re-elected thereby by a handsome majority.

Michigan, too, is in her right place, with a round 25,000 majority against "My Policy," and in favor of "keeping the power of the government near the people." Her whole Congressional delegation is elected by increased majorities.

PENNSYLVANIA'S INLAND CITIES.

The rapid growth of the population of Pennsylvania is shown by the largely increased vote cast at the late election in nearly every part of the State. The ratio of increase was larger in Philadelphia than elsewhere, but in the interior, especially in some of the smaller cities and important boroughs, there was also a large augmentation of the votes.

We have prepared, from the official returns, the following summary of the votes in a few of these cities and boroughs:

Table with 3 columns: City, Geary, Clymer, Total. Reading, 2,704, 2,889, 5,593. Lancaster, 1,601, 1,930, 3,531. Harrisburg, 1,582, 1,733, 3,315. Scranton, 1,495, 2,443, 3,938. York, 930, 1,237, 2,167. Pottsville, 1,333, 810, 2,143. Allentown, 1,038, 1,010, 2,048. Williamsport, 1,046, 984, 2,030. Easton, 1,214, 738, 1,952. Norristown, 840, 837, 1,677. Easton, 912, 948, 1,860.

These figures, we venture to say, represent pretty accurately the present population of all the places named, with the exception of Scranton, which has not probably increased to more than about twenty thousand. There was an awful amount of illegal voting there, among the Democrats, in order that their candidate for Congress might be elected, and they carried the borough by about a thousand majority.

The population of the other cities is probably fairly represented by the figures in the second column. Reading, the thriving capital of "Old Berks," has grown to be the third largest city of Pennsylvania, distancing Lancaster, which used to hold that rank. Harrisburg has almost caught up to Lancaster, and it is growing so fast, and adding so largely to its manufacturing establishments, that it will certainly rank next to Reading by the year 1870, when the next census will be taken.
