ral use, scores of consecutive hours IMPARTIAL SUFFRAGE. may be conveniently spent in During the recent campaign we mainthem, while hundreds of miles tained that the only issue before the of space are passed over. But people of Pennsylvania was the Constithere is still one great evil which every tutional Amendment. The Democratic traveler on American railroads experimanagers labored furiously to evade this great question and to thrust upon the country the idea that negro suffrage, with all its imaginary horrors, was being forced upon it by the Republican party. Disgusting and ridiculous posters, handbills and caricatures. intended to foster this falsehood, were scattered broadcast throughout the State by the respectable gentlemen having the conduct of Mr. Clymer's canvass. The -people were not deceived by this paltry expedient. and they quietly went to the polls and decided the one question. which they knew was before them, with a most emphatic vote. Meantime, the sgitation of the suffrage question by Mr. Clymer and his friends has had an effect which they neither counted on nor desired. The public mind has become familiarized with the essential idea of some needed change in the present system of suffrage, and the way is being rapidly opened for such a modification of it as will secure a better development of the true Republican idea than we have yet reached in the United States. The fact that the Copperhead leaders have so bitterly assailed the principle of impartial suffrage is, to the loyal mind of the country, a sort of prima facie evidence that there must be something good and fair and honest in it. And this evidence is strongly re-inforced by several other practical considerations. The election in the city of New York, for instance, is calculated to enforce the feeling that we have too much suffrage already. The people who have real interests at stake in this country stand aghast at seeing the great State of New York almost overpowered by a huge majority of nearly 50,000 yoters, a large proportion, of whom can neither read nor write, and are incapable, in their present condition of ignorance and degradation, of comprehending the first rudimental principles of self-government. The intelligent. educated, industrious, useful people of the United States are every day losing what faith they had in the doctrine of universal suffrage as it now exists, and are getting a clearer perception of the idea that the vevil is not to be remedied. by increasing it still further. If it is unjust and dangerous to place the ballot in the hand of the white man who cannot "read what another man writes, nor write what another man can read," it would be not only unjust and dangerous; but wilfully illogical to put it into the hand of the black man who is, in the same benighted condition. Political distinctions in this country, on account of color, are as certain to become extinct in the next few years, as is any other coming event. The whole tendency in that direction is as inexorable as the law of gravitation, and it is folly and blindness to doubt or the Democratic party will have none of deny it. All parties, a few years hence, him, and the sober jackdaws of the Reences. We refer to the way in which meals are furnished along the lines of the roads. A halt of twenty minutes. twice or thrice a day, a crowded dining room, a hurrying and skurrying, an ill assorted meal gobbled down hastily and unhealthily, while the feeder is in constant apprehension that the jangling bells and the screaming whistles outside are giving the signal for the starting of the train, a handing over of seventy-five cents to the proprietor of the eating house, a rush for the cars, and this is dinner. How unsatisfactory it is, every traveler well understands; how piggish it is, every one can see, and how unwholesome it must of necessity be, is self-evident.

"TWENTY MINUTES FOR DINNER!"

There is a great want in our American railway system that calls loudly for-reform. Our country is so wide-spread, with great commercial and social circles at immense distances from each other, that journies of an extent scarcely dreamed of in Europe, are frequent here.

To pass over the hundreds and thousands of miles which must be traversed by the American traveler, railroads are rudiments of a simple education.

But it is always easier to point out an evil than to devise a remedy for it. Time is too precious on railway lines to permit more than the orthodox twenty minutes allowed for meals; while refreshment cars do not seem to answer the desired purpose, judging from the fact that they have been discontinued on roads where they were formerly in use. The French system seems to be the least liable to objection of any that we have heard of. On some of the railroads in France, the person who desires to dine is furnished with a decent dinner, that is neatly packed in a basket that is contrived for the purpose. The meal is supplied hot, and the traveler partakes of it leisurely and comfortably while he is speeding onward in his journey. At a station further along upon the road the baskets are gathered together, and they perhaps go back to their original starting point with the supper of some other traveler.

There is a fine field in respect to railroad victualling for the exercise of Yankee ingenuity. The French system furnishes a hint which might be improved upon, and a little mechanical skill and a little judicious organization might contrive a plan that would enable the traveler to partake of his meals with decency and comfort. But anything short of absolute starvation would be preferable to the present twenty minutes' scramble at the roadside eating house. Who will be the benefactor of traveling humanity, by furnishing a remedy for this one great defect of our American railway system?
