THE DEAD FLOWER.

In an old and musty volume, of strange and curious lore,

A relic found I, dried and withered, of some happy days of yore.

By whose hand had it been placed there why or wherefore, when or where?— Of true love perhaps a token, stored away Haply gathered from God's-acre, dear memento of a friend

Cone before, yet in the memory ever living to the end!

There it lay, its pristine beauty faded—gone; but to the eyes

Of the one who there concealed it, dearer than any prize! As I found it, so remains it, undisturbed, but not forgot. Ever sacred I preserve it, for it says: Forget-

Italy Free and United. "Everybody feels," remarks our able Florence correspondent, "that the poetry of Italian regeneration ceases now, and the prose begins." And what a splendid epic is presented to our view in the patriotic struggles of the Italian people for the regeneration and consolidation of their country! The poem is of the most richly varied and exciting charactor, especially in its concluding pages. The time is short since the battle of Novara struck down, in apparently hopeless ruin, the cause of Italian inde-pendence and unity. When the Cri-mean war broke out, it took the world by surpsise to learn that Sardinia was about to enter into the conflict between Russia and the allied powers; but the discipline and bravery of the contingent which she sent to the Crimea proved that the vitality of Italy had not been impaired by the national-misfortunes. There was another surprise when, in 1859, Sardinia defied Austria, and resolved once more-to measure swords with that then great military power. This time, however, Cavour's statesmanship had succeeded in securing a powerful ally in France; Napoleon's legions hastened to the sup-port of Sardinia in her unequal struggle with the armies of the Hapsburgs; and Montebello, Magenta, Solferino secured the liberation of Lombardy, and opened the way for the union of Italy "from the Alps to the Adriatic." We say opened the way, for the peace of Villafranca left Venetia still under the domination of the hated foreigner. But deliverance was to come in an entirely unexpected way; and the long-deferred patriotic hope of Italy at length found its fulfillment when the pride and power of Austria were effectually humbled on the fields of Konisggratz and Sadowa by the military prowess of Prussia and the deathdealing needle-gun. And at last Venetia is free, and Venice, that once "sat in state," after all her humiliation and her sufferings, welcomes the gallant and fortunate King of Italy as the sovereign of her choice, tendering him her allegiance with a unanimity and enthusiasm without parallel in the annals of any nation. Of the festive rejoicings which attended this glorious event, of the imposing ceremonials and the gorgeous pageantry which marked the new birth-day of the Queen of the Adriatic, our cor-respondence has given full de-respondence has given full de-tails, which have no doubt been perused by our readers with feelings of the liveliest and most heartfelt gratification. There is but one slight drawback to the pleasure with which we read of the rejoicings of the Venetians. It is gle with Austria, Italy suffered some serious reverses in fight. But, although the fortunes of war were against her when she met the Austrians in battle, the bravery of her sons leaves the national character untarnished; and although her military prestige has suffered somewhat, she has proved herself a foe worthy of the steel of the finest soldiery of any country in Europe. It could be wished that she had by her unaided arm struck down the usurper's power and achieved her own deliverance. But it was ordered otherwise; and so long as her freedom was not won without heroic effort on her part, nor by means inconsistent with the national honor, every lover of liberty will rejoice in the deliverance she has obtained, and heartily wish her a career of unbroken prosperity.

There is one feature of peculiar and striking significance in this whole business to which the future historian of modern Italy can hardly fail to give prominence in narrating the national atruggle for independence. It is that the movement has been essentially democratic in its character. It is true that kings and princes and nobles have borne arms in the cause, and shared with the common soldiers the perils of the battle-field. But the movement had its inspiration in the yearning of the popular heart for freedom and unity, and found its chief strength in the enthusiastic support of the masses. : We have its most fitting type in one of its greatest leaders—the heroic Garibaldi. connection of a man like this with the movement, and the fact that he threw his whole noble soul into it, are sufficient to indicate its real character. Instinctively this representative democrat perceived its true aim and inevitable tendency, and hence his readiness to offer up his life for its success. It was in response to the call of the people too that Charles Albert drew the sword against Austria; and his son, Victor Emanuel, who might well adopt the boast of Napoleon the First that he was the people's king, tells the deputation from Venice, sent to announce the result of the Plebiscite, that dearer to him than the iron crown-emblem of his dominion over a wide and now powerful kingdom—is "the love of the people." This King has felt the national pulse; he knows that the national heart beats high with democratic aspirations; and it is evidently his ambition to be a democratic monarch. Whatever the form which government may hereafter wear in Italy, it is clear that the idea of popular sovereignty is ineradically rooted in the popular mind. The fact is sufficient to keep alive among the people of the United States a warm interest in the fortunes of the reconstructed kingdom.

"The poetry of Italian regeneration is now over, and the prose begins. That prose, let us hope, will be illuminated by deeds, which, although they may be wanting in those qualities which have invested the poetry with so romantic a charm, shall spendidly illustrate the blessings of peace, the triumphs of industry, and the power of national union. It is now to be seen whether Italy will be equal to the task of working out the high destiny now before her. For our part, judging from her progress during the last 25 years, we think it safe to augur a brilliant future for the nation,-N. Y. Tribune.

The Westminster Hotel. This beautiful hotel, now nearly ready for guests, is on the corner of Sixteenth street and Irving Place. It is a five-story building, built of Canada stone, and for local transport of the story building, built of Canada stone, and for local transport of the story cation and appearance is not surpassed by any house in the city. The hotel at present contains one hundred and seventy rooms, but an addition is soon to be made on Irving Place, which will make the number of rooms three hundred and fifty. The main entrance is on Sixteenth street, over which entrance is on sixteenth street, were which is a small balcony, the stone work being beautifully ornamented, and resting on heavy stone pillars.

The ladies' entrance is on Irving Place, and is surmounted by a heavy and tastefully decorated cope; resting also on stone pillars. Entering from Sixteenth street, brings you into the large hall, the flooring of which is a very handsome pattern of slate work. Immediately on the left as you enter is the restaurant, for, besides a Table d'Hote, the proprietors intend to furnish accommodations a la carte. This restaurant is to be handsomely fitted up and its tables supplied with the best of everything the markets afford. On the right are the barroom and office. The former will also be used as a readingroom, and the proprietors, well knowing the advantages of a well-kept bar, have made this elegant in every respect. It is well lighted, being the corner room, and the counter is the most magnificent in the city. It is entirely of the purest white marble, handsomely sculptured. Further on, and across the half, is the hotel dining room, a most cheerful-looking and prettily decorated apartment, and so well is everything arranged in the house, that no odor from the kitchen can possibly enter. Ascending the main stairway you enter the parlors. These are laid with velvet carpets, and furnished in the richest and most luxurious manner. white marble and beautifully chiseled. The centre one, which is far the richest, is most elaborately worked, the front being a medallion with raised Roman face, and cost $350; the others, though not so expensive, are yet very rich. One other feature here is worthy of notice. The wall papering of each room is differently covered, but with the richest patterns imaginable and one might suppose that the fairies in the "Black Crock" had lent their assistance in their manufacture.

On the third floor are the private parlors and bedrooms. These are all elegantly carpeted and furnished, and in every room is a handsome stationary marble washstand to match the mantel work. The fourth floor is similar. On the fifth floor the rooms are large and comfortable, but are not se rich in the style of furniture, though nothing has been left undone that could add to the comfort of their occupants. From the windows of this floor may also be obtained a fine view of a very handsome neighbor-

The rooms on the lower floor are all connected, offering great convenience to families and traveling parties; and each floor is provided with commodious bath rooms and water closets. There is also a patent elevator, to land guests and their baggage on whatever floor they are to inhabit—thus saving many weary steps.

The house is excellently ventilated from top to bottom, the apparatus used being Garge's Atmospheric Ventilator. The prices in this hotel will be the same as in other first-class hotels, and its proximity to the best places of amusement in the city will, undoubtedly, make it popular. For the accommodation of guests, there is a very handsome billiard room attached to the house, Messrs, Roberts and Palmer, the proprietors, are gentlemen well-known to the public, the former; from his long connection with the press of this city and Boston, and also through his connection with the American House, on the corner of Seventeenth street and Broadway; the latter from the excellent and liberal manner in which he has catered to the amusement public of the country, and particularly of late in furnishing the ballet for "The Black Crook."

It is the intention of these gentlemen to keep a strictly first-class hotel, and we feel assured that no expense will be spared, and nothing left undone that is necessary for the comfort of their guests. The house will be opened on the 15th of October. Mr. G. S. Abrahams will be the presiding genius in the office, and to the courtesy of this gentle-man we are indebted for a visit to the building and all necessary explanations.-N. Y. Commercial.

From St. Louis. ST. Louis, Nov. 28.—The Stephens wing of the Fenians, in mass meeting at their head-quarters last night, adopted resolutions reaffirming confidence in Stephens, condemning another movement on Canada as a waste of blood and material, and warning their brethren against appeals in behalf of their condemned friends in Canadian prisons, on the ground that nothing can be done in time to save them. Also, expressing belief that England dare not execute the sentence of the Canadian Courts; but if she does, their only hope of successful retalia-tion and the establishment of Irish nationality is prompt and energetic co-operation with their Irish brothers on Irish soil; and to this end they urge immediate organization and beuntiful contributions of money Tenders, 72½. KILLED HIS FATHER.—On the 2d instant in Mayfield, Cuyahoga county, Ohio, a young man named Carpenter killed his father by striking him with a stone. For some reasons the son was beating one of a pair of horses he was driving, when the father interfered with the result stated. The family, not wishing to have the son tried, told him that if he would leave that part of the country and never return, the affair the country and never return, the affair would not be made known. The young man, who is a desperate character, lingered about the place however, and the case has been made know to the authorities, as the family do not feel safe with him at large.
