VICTIMS OF PHOTOGRAPHY. It is a mournful tale for chickens, but in the land of Bright and Dickens, one single photographing mart, in the name of the photographer, consumes two thousand eggs each day, and in all England, the same way, his million chickens, his million chickens, are yearly thus plucked in the bud; while we unfeathered bipeds call to cheerfully, at Foster Hall.

country, and a good deal among the native-born citizens, who feel that England has little claim upon their good feeling. The Fenians have, at any rate, chosen the right place, this time, for their attempt to liberate Ireland, and it is to be hoped that they are not acting without full preparation and thorough calculation of their own strength, as compared with that of the British authorities. But there have been so many calamitous failures to throw off British rule in Ireland, that more light is needed upon the present enterprise before any thing can be predicted concerning its result.

THE WORK OF A THOUSAND MEN FOR FOUR YEARS. This inscription, placed prominently upon the new railroad bridge across the Susquehanna at Havre de Grace, very pithily tells the story of what combined labor, capital and energy can accomplish when stimulated by enterprise. Through all the toil of sinking dams, building masses of masonry in the bed of the river, constructing mighty abutments, and rearing the ultimate superstructure, the enterprise has gone forward from its beginning to its completion, and "the work of a thousand men for four years" was superior to all the difficulties to be contended with, and competent to cope with ice in winter, with floods in the spring, and with the disheartening wreck and ruin of the tornado of last summer. But this work by no means forms an isolated instance of what labor and capital can perform, and it only attracts special attention because it is one of the latest of their achievements. There are thousands of evidences upon all sides of what man is equal to in the way of labor and enterprise, and among these is the fact that California now has ten thousand men employed in smoothing her way to the valley of the Mississippi through the Rocky Mountains, and she confidently expects to have the great task completed within a period of four years from the time it was commenced.

During four years of war hundreds of thousands of men were engaged in the work of destruction. They were not only not employed in creating wealth, and in adding to the prosperity or the happiness of mankind; but they were busy in destroying what had been produced with much toil and great cost. When it is brought prominently to notice what tens of thousands of men can perform in the material advancement of the country, within a period equal to that during which the war lasted, the wickedness of a rebellion, that could thus retard the progress of the nation, is more fully appreciated. The simple inscription on the bridge at Havre de Grace has more significance, as bearing upon the advancement of mankind than the "Soldiers: forty centuries look down upon you!" of the first Napoleon.

seen among the various races of men. He delivered an interesting lecture on this subject, at the Assembly Building, last Monday evening, illustrated by diagrams and paintings. His theory finds many supporters. Dr. Newton, Professor of Surgery in the Eclectic Medical College of New York, in a letter to Mr. Dye, dated November 18, 1866, remarks: "To you, sir, now belongs the credit of fully explaining this wonderful mystery, with proofs and arguments, that not only carry conviction with them, but place the subject beyond controversy." He repeats the lecture to-morrow evening, at Washington Hall.
