ROGERS IN A RAGE. We are sorry to say that Mr. Rogers, Hon. Andrew Jackson Rogers, of New

in the bud!"

ENGLAND. A London correspondent of a New York cotemporary, in speaking of the chances of a general European war, 88.ys:

"In England there is some perturbation. The army cannot be raised above 50,000, with an uncertain contingent of volunteers and militia. There is no organization to feed or take care of what force might be de-pended upon. Conscription is out of the question. Parliament will not vote it; the question. Parliament will not vote it; the people will not submit to it; the Government people will not submit to it; the government dare not apply it to Ireland. The colonies call on England for help in every emer-gency, but never help her in her need.

"There is want of vigor and force in the central life. The political prestige of Eng-land has declined; her military power is in-considerable; her credit is shattered.

"Then, if a war does come, and England "Then, if a war does come, and England cannot keep out of it, everybody knows that an army car land on the coast, and in three marches take London and its great arsenal, Woolwich, when England would be utterly powerless and at the mercy of the invader; for there is but one great arsenal, one military depot, and the little army, de-feated in one action, has no line to fall back upon. and no reserves."

upon, and no reserves." Unless all signs fail, the writer of this passage quoted above, is right in his opinion that England has seen her best days. Things have changed since the times when by the force of cash and pluck the "tight little island" could go on adding discovery after discovery, and conquest after conquest, until the sun shone perpetually upon her possessions. During the times of the Plantagenets, the Tudors and the Stuarts, arbitrary power, exercised over the ignorant masses, enabled the Government of England to hold its own in war; but the realm has been undergoing a gradual change since the days of the Commonwealth. Cromwell and his "Ironsides" set a ball in motion that has not yet stopped rolling, and that will continue to roll until it has swept away the last relics of feudalism which stand in the way of a just progress. The Restoration of the Stuarts was a short-lived triumph of the friends of arbitrary power, and it only tended to strengthen the feeling of determined opposition to class government, which obtained a permanent footing when William III. landed at Torbay. England carried on a gigantic struggle with Napoleon; but it was done almost entirely by dint of cash and shrewd statesmanship. The Continental powers did most of the fighting and England furnished the money. But Great Britain has now quite as much as she can carry in the way of debt. This once proud power presents the condition of a professedly free Government that depends upon the slavish devotion of its subjects for support, while denying to them the rights of citizenship and while oppressing them by unequal laws. The American colonies led off in a revolt against the rule of England, and the latter was un-Jersey, is not pleased with the result of able to prevent a separation; Ireland is only kept in subjection by the strong hand, and were it not for the religious dissensions among her own people the or never cross. There was an amiability strong hand would not be strong enough to restrain a brave race became abusive, nor called names. But who are restive under oppression. since then he has been home and the The people of the Canadian provinces, people like him so well that they have | fully alive to the disadvantages of their decided to keep him there, which he colonial condition, as compared with that does not relish, and, yesterday, he made of the free States along their southern an exhibition of temper on the floor of border, are openly advocating separation from England and annexation to the United States. India needs a large standing army to keep its masses in subjection, and except for the treasure drawn from it, it would be a source of unqualified uneasiness to the British ministry in the event of a war. The dullest English statesman will not fail to see that England cannot much longer block the progress of free institutions; that she cannot much longer maintain a form of government which into hotter and hotter fury and kicking is founded upon privilege and class, without regard for the claims of the governed who understand their rights perfectly well, and in the event of a foreign war, the masses would have "no stomach for the fight," while the comfortable shopkeepers would be very shy of shouldering a musket, or of putting themselves in the way of needle-guns or breech-loading rifles. England does not feel in any better state of mind in view of the great American Rebellion, and of the part which she took in it. The indecent haste of her recognition of the belligerent rights of the rebels; her shameful disregard of international law in the cises of the Alabama and the Shen ndoah, and the open countenance and aid which she gave to the rebellious South upon all possible occasions, are not forgotten upon either side of the Atlantic. The tremendous military power which the war evoked, the complete triumph of the Republic against its enemies at home and abroad, and the vast and unsus pected financial resources of the country, as developed by the war, have taught England a lesson which, had she learned it six years earlier, would have left the pirates Semmes and Maffit without the means of destroying helpless merchantmen. England has learned her own weakness and the power of the United States at about the time that she is discovering that she ranks second to at least three of the Continental powers, two, of which have no special cause for lovingher.

rat! I see it in the breeze! I hear it | now when radical Republicans say that brewing in the storm! But, by the thus far it has not been accomplished, blessing of Providence, I will yet nip it | the Democratic oracles aforesaid "'bout ship" and declare that it has been done. thus belittling their own pretences of prophetic wisdom, and demonstrating that they were either altogether wrong in their premises, or entirely at fault in their conclusions. The most curious feature in the entire business is their intense anxiety to convict them selves, of blundering.

> PETROLEUM IN THE SENATE. That delightful humorist, Petroleum V. Nasby, has a rival in Senator Sauls bury, in his estimate of the proper qualifications for suffrage. Petroleum in his last letter, thus discourses on the willingness of the inhabitants of "Confedrit X Roads" to extend suffrage to the negro:

"We propose to be just to em. We shel give such uv em the ballot ez are suffishent ly intellijent, and we shel not put the standard too high nuther. We shel give every wun uv em the ballot who is able to reed the Greek testament fluently and pass a credible examinashen in Lattin, embroidery, French, German, English grammar and double-entry book-keepin. The path to the polls yoo see is open to em."

Saulsbury takes the same exalted ground, and yesterday gave his views on the proposition to require voters in the District of Columbia to read and write. With the fine scorn of one whose own constituents are fully up to the standard constituents are fully up to the standard of Petroleum V. Nasby, he exclaimed: "What was the test? A person who could read and write his name. A wonder-ful amount of education to qualify a man for the discharge of the high office and trust of voting. Great knowledge of the system of government under which we live!" live"

It would be interesting to know how many of Saulsbury's or his friend Morrissey's constituents can really read or write.

the last election. At the last session, Mr. Rogers was playful, amusing, talkative, and nonsensical, but he was rarely about his worst madness. He never the House, painfully disappointing to that public which has been wont to look for a "Rogers" with the same gusto with which they anticipate Nasby's next letter. The subject of punishing treason was before the House, and it seems to have had the same effect on Rogers that a banderilla's red cloak has upon an illtempered bull. He flew round and round the arena, amid the shouts of the delighted spectators, lashing himself up the dust generally, while, like skillful picadors, Kelley and Thayer, and Wilson and Grinnell planted their barbed fireworks in his flanks and goaded him on to new ebullitions of wrath. He calls Congress "a set of crazy fanatics;" he tells them that "they are worse than a long Parliament;" he vows that they "disgrace and degrade the people of the country;" he denounces their "despotic conduct" (with somewhat profane inaccuracy, unless he expects his breath to cease on the 4th of March next,); and he asserts that they are "morally guilty of treason."

But he does not reach his climax of absurdity until he strikes the topic of his initial-sake A. J. Then he becomes great He swallows the President at a single gulp; he swings round the Johnsonian circle in a single gyration. "He would stand by the President from one end of his policy to the other;" and then he gave utterance to a sentence that will live as long as the name of Rogers shall survive in the memory of man. He said that he "believed that the President would go down to posterity as one of the brightest jewels that had ever illuminated the country!" This would have contented a common devotee at the shrine of our "brightest jewel," but not so Rogers, and when he proceeds, with renewed profanity, to deelare that the Almighty would "at least have his name written in letters of gold upon the altar of Christianity," his audience may be nardoned if the blasphemy was lost sight of, in the extravagant absurdity and they received his nonsense with "loud laughter, which the Speaker in vain strove to suppress."

From this, out, this infuriated young exile from the Fortieth Congress meandered off into a bewildered jumble of figures and flights that reminded one of withing but Sir Boyle Roach's famous sisted that it would be impossible to
