EDUCATIONAL TESTS. The debate in the Senate upon the hill regulating suffrage in the District o Columbia took a course which wil greatly surprise the majority of intelli gent people in this country and in Europe. That Mr. Saulsbury should have opposed the proposition to impose an educational test was to be expected. as his own power in Delaware would be soon destroyed if education were to make any considerable advance in that State. But when Mr. Wilson and Mr. Sumner, representing Massachusetts, one of whose proudest boasts has been that she abandoned universal suffrage and adopted an educational test, are found arguing on Mr. Saulsbury's side of the question, the surprise of the people will be universal and genuine. The telegraphic reports of the speeches against an educational standard are of course condensed, and do not, perhaps give a clear idea of the arguments advanced. Mr. Wilson appears to have assumed the remarkable position that "impartial suffrage would result in hindering the education of the black man." while universal suffrage would promote it. The idea is that in the former case they would be prevented from learning to read and write, and in the latter they would be instructed so as to make them intelligent voters. In other words, the more inducements are offered the black man the less he will improve. If the prize of the ballot box is set before him. as the reward of his ability to read and write, he will not strive after it, but if the boon is given him without any qualification he will certainly work to fit himself for what he already possesses.

Reason and experience both seem to be against this logic. Universal suffrage now exists among the white population of the city of New York. Has it improved the educational condition of the ignorant masses of that great city? Is there any desire there to make intelligent voters of the people who control the elections and send prize-fighters and burglars and faro-bank keepers to Congress? Is not the very contrary the truth? The ignorant emigrant, who has he lands at Castle Garden, finds himself the Fire Department of that city.

clothed with a political equality which | Property-holders demanded it; puts him on a level with the Astors and Stewarts and Vanderbilts and Morrisseys of New York, and he is well content with his ignorance when he knows that he needs no learning to make him one of the sovereigns of the land. The illustration is a case precisely to the point, and goes to show that learning should precede and not be expected to follow the ballot.

Mr. Sumner's argument, coming from one who ordinarily carries his adherence to abstract principle to an obstinate extreme, is as unlike himself, as is that of Mr. Wilson. He admits that he votes upon a bill involving a very important principle, upon a mere consideration of expediency, based upon the proposition that "the votes of the black loyalists are needed now." No doubt their votes are needed to re-inforce the white loyalists at the South, but whether universal suffrage, offered with this discount which the Senate has put upon education, will secure the colored vote for the cause of liberty and Republican principles and institutions, is a question about which very grave doubts may be entertained.

THE ITURBIDES. A funeral took place at St. John's Catholic Church in this city to-day, that, under different circumstances, might have excited much interest in the world. Augustin de Iturbide, oldest son of the only rightful Emperor that Mexico ever had, died in New York on Tuesday, and his remains were brought to Philadelphia for interment by the side of his mother, the ex-empress, who expired here a few years ago. The liberation of Mexico from Spanish rule was the work of Augustin de Iturbide more than of any other one man, or of any party of men. His elevation to imperial power was an unsolicited reward for his services to his country. His fall and his subsequent execution were early illustrations of the inconstancy of the Mexican character, of which there have been many other illustrations during the past forty years.

Thegentleman whose remains were today laid at rest at St. John's, was the rightful heir to any properly organized empire there might be in Mexico. The present spurious head of a fallen government had a certain sense of the rights of the Iturbides, when he adopted as his successor a nephew of the gentleman just deceased. Don Angel de Iturbide, the father of this heir presumptive to the Mexican throne, was present as chief mourner at his brother's grave to-day. He has not, and never has had, any confidence in the success of Napoleon's scheme for establishing Maximilian, and therefore he is not surprised or disturbed at the prospect of his little boy's loss of the offered inheritance. Nor had the late Don Augustin any more confidence in the Franco-Austrian establishment. When called on for a speech at the opera house on Maximilian's fête-day, a year or two ago, he is reported to have said: "You want me to speak as the son of the liberator of Mexico, the immortal Iturbide. Well, he was your chosen Emperor: he was the only honest man in Mexico, and so you shot him! In doing so you acted like the parcel of robbers and assassins that you always were and always will

These were bold words to be uttered at such a time and place, but they were pretty near the truth, and the Mexicans present received them with applause. Perhaps had he been in Mexico and in good health, during the past few months, a party might have rallied to place him at the head of the nation. But he was in Europe suffering from an acute disease and he returned to this country only a short time ago, to die. In the total obscurity that veils the future of his native country, it is impossible to predict what form of government can be permanently established, or who may be at its head. But there have been stranger things than the elevation of another Iturbide would be, and it would certainly be more acceptable to the Mexicans and more agreeable to the United States, than the continuance of a throne, established by European bayonets, and occupied by a prince of the house of Hapsburg.

NOT DOING IT.

A very pretty example of "How not to do it" has just been afforded in the case of the bill for the better regulation of the Fire Department. Some weeks since Mr. Evans of Common Council originated a bill for the purpose referred to, and pending its consideration it was referred to the Committee on Fire and Trusts, where it was hoped that it would be "laid to rest." The sentiment of the public was so clearly, opposed to the smothering process that vitality was preserved; but the bill was so much emasculated by the majority of the committee, that when it was reported to Councils, yesterday, it was essentially the play of Hamlet with the part of the Royal Dane omitted. There was also a minority report which preserved substance of the original bill. Common Council adopted the minority report, and the bill was sent into Select Council, where it was indefinitely postponed, and in or. der to kill it "very dead," the parliamentary expedient was resorted to of voting down a motion to reconsider. So City Councils have not done it once more, and the portion of the Fire Department which claims to be superior to law has carried the day. As a general principle, State interference with interests that are purely local is not a thing to be commended; but there are extreme cases where such interference is necessary, from the peculiar surroundings of proposed reforms. In New York it was found to be impossible to accomplish any a ballot thrust into his hand almost as change that looked to a revolution in the men who were unwilling to have their inalienable rights to "run wid der masheen" trenched upon, were too potential in Ward politics to be offended, and Aldermen and Common Councilmen were unwilling to deprive large bodies of voters of the privilege of washing out an entire neighborhood on the occasion of a fire and of breaking the heads of all persons who objected to the aquatic indulgence. The State Legislature, which was subject to no such influences, abolished the volunteer system and New York now has a paid Fire Department. Philadelphia may yet have to apply to Harrisburg for the relief that its own city authorities are unable or unwilling to afford them.

THE FALARIES OF SCHOOL TEACHERS The subject of the increase of salaries of the teachers in the public schools is exciting no little attention, not only among the members of the Board of Controllers and the teachers, but among the public generally. That the lower grades of school teachers are inadequately paid no one who will inquire into the facts can fail to acknowledge, while the whole range of salaries is twenty-five to thirty per cent. below those of any other large cities. The Board of Controllers have presented to Councils a petition asking an increase in the salaries, and the teachers are moving in a body in furtherance of the purpose. They are to hold a meeting to-morrow afternoon in the Girl's High School building, in Sergeant street, to organize a movement in that direction.
