From the Providence Journal. "THE MILLER OF HARZ." A miller of Harz, on a long summer's day, Fell asleep in the shade of his mill, And dreamed of a sure and speedy way His coffers with riches to fill.

A creaking old wheel that his forefathers built, And the force of a stream turned round, For a century past had driven the mill, And the grain for a century ground.

But it happened this day that the brook wa low.

And the noisy old wheel stood still; So the miller, for lack of something to do, Fell asleep in the shade of his mill.

As soon as he 'woke he at once began To follow the plan of his dream, And in spite of all that his friends would say, He turned the course of the stream.

The summer had past, cold winter was nigh, Still the miller could grind no corn, And the neighbors who laughed at his use-He answered with bitter scorn.

The dam was finished; but not that year, And the people had ceased to go To the little mill, whose idle wheel Was buried beneath the snow.

To the miller's joy, the spring-time came, And the torrents poured into the glen, Filling up to the brim the pond he had made, And turning the wheel again.

But one night as the villagers safe at home Heard the sobs of the driving rain, The dam gave way, and down the stream Went the miller, the mill, and the grain.

How many a man in every land Like the miller has followed a dream, And sooner or late, with mill and grain, Like the miller gone down the stream.

A BOOK ABOUT LAWYERS.

Curious Stories.—Judicial Buunders in England.

Mr. Jeaffreson, who wrote, three or four years ago, a successful book about doctors, has just published another in the same vein, called "A Book About Lawyers." It is issued in London by Hurst & Blackett. The first ten chapters, covering seventy pages, are grouped under the head of "The Great Seal." Other sets of chapters gossip about "Lawyers on Horseback," "Loves of the Lawyers," "Costume and Toilet," "Amateur Theatricals," "Mirth," &c. Mr. Jeaffreson (says the London Examiner) has brought together the results of much out-of-the-way reading, including some "things not generally known," and a good many anecdotes which, if they have been told before, are too good for any one to mind hearing them again. One of the best anecdotes in the first volume is this old story of

WILKES AND THURLOW. Like his friend John Scott, Thurlow could shed tears and be wondrous pathetic whenever tears could aid his eloquence. After dexterously coquetting between the queen's and the prince's parties in 1788, he delievered, in the House of Lords, his memorable declaration of gratitude to and affection for the afflicted king. Having broken his harangue with several distinct fits of nervous agitation, and at one point having wept copiously, he resumed the clearest melody of his sonorous voice, and concluded with these words: "A noble viscount has, in an eloquent and energetic manner, expressed his feelings on the present melancholy situation of his Majesty—feelings rendered more poignant from the noble viscount's having been in the habit of personally receiving marks of indulgence and kindness from his suffering sovereign. My own sorrow, my lords, is aggravated by the same cause. My debt of gratitude is indeed ample for the many favors which have been graciously conferred upon me by his Majesty; and when I forget my sovereign may my God forget me! As Thurlow sat down, the sensation amongst his brother peers was profound; but Liberty Wilkes, who had been an auditor of the speech, was less deeply affected. A vicious light burned brightly in his squinting eyes, and as a more than usually diabolical sneer played upon his hideous face, the people's friend hissed out: "God forget you! He'll see you

Among the gossip of the book are the following

ANECDOTES OF THURLOW. A solicitor had made a series of statements in a vain endeavor to convince his lordship of a certain person's death. "Really my lord," at last the solicitor exclaimed, goaded into a fury by Thur-low's repeated ejaculations of "That's no proof of the man's death;" "Really, my lord, it is very hard, and it is not right that you won't believe me. I saw the man dead in his coffin. My lord, I tell you he was my client, and he is dead." "No wonder," retoried Thur-low, with a grunt and a sneer, "since he was your client. Why did you not tell me that sooner? It would kill me to have such a fellow as you for my attorney." That this great lawyer could thus address a respectable gentleman is less astonishing when it is remembered that he once horrified a party of aristhat he once normed a party of aris-tocratic visitors at a country house by replying to a lady who pressed him to take some grapes, "Grapes, madam, grapes! Did not I say a minute ago that I had the gripes!" Once this ungentle lawyer was fairly worsted in a verbal conflict by an Irish pavior. On crossing the threshold of his Ormond street house one morning, the Chancellor was incensed at seeing a load of paving stones placed before his door. Singling out the tallest of a score of Irish workmen who were repairing the thoroughfare, he poured upon him one o those torrents of curses with which his most insolent speeches were usually preluded and then told the man to move the stones instantly. "Where shall I take them to, your honor?" the pavior inquired. From the Chancellor another voiley of blasphemous abuse, ending with, "You lousy scoundrel, take them to hell—do you hear me?" "Have a care your honor," answered the workman, with quiet drollery, "don't you think now that if I took 'em to the other place your honor would be less likely to fall over them ?"

The famous Lord Kenyon is pictured as an ignorant and absurd person, and these anecdotes are told:

JUDICIAL BLUNDERS. One day he would silence an importu-One day he would silence an importunate suitor or loquacious barrister by exclaiming, "Est modus in rebus, or as the vernacular hath it, there must be an end of all things;" on an another day he would clothe his face with the wisest of his judicial aspects, and observe, "In advancing to a conclusion on this subject, I am resolved stare supra antiquas vias." When a glaring case of fraud was brought before his observation, he exclaimed, "The dishonesty is manifest; in the words of an old Latin sage, apparently "Latet-anguis in herbai." to a deply-redified grand in herbai." to a deeply-edified grand-jury he remarked in a tone of solemn pathos, "Having thus discharged your consciences, gentlemen, you may retire to your homes in peace, with the delightful conscions ness of having performed your duties well; and as your compose yourselvefor nocturnal slumber, you may apply to yourselves the words of the heather philosopher, "Aut Casar, aut nullus."

Without the assistance of Latin, some of his remarks uttered from the judg of his remarks thereof from the judgment-seat were very provocative of laughter. "The allegation," he exclaimed indignantly during the examination of an unsatisfactory witness, "is as far from truth as old Booterium from the Northern Main—a line I have heard or met with God knows wheer."

On another occasion, when he reprimanded an attorney for causing a need less and vexatious delay in a cause, he observed in boldly metaphorical lan guage, "This is the last hair in the tail of procrastination, and it must be plucked out;" and he is reported to have lectured "twelve gentlemen in the box" thus: "If an individual can break down any of those safeguards which the Constitution has wisely and cautiously erected, by poisoning the minds of the jury at a time when they are called upon to decide, he will stab the administration of justice in its most vital parts."

But Kenyon's grandest oration was made at the trial of Williams for publishing Tom Paine's "Age of Reason," when the learned judge in his summing up observed—"Christianity, from its earliest institution, met with its opposers. The professors were very soon called upon to publish their 'Apologies' for the doctrines they had embraced. In what manner they did that, and whether they had the advantage of their adversaries or sunk under the superiority of their argument, mankind for near two thou sand years have had the opportunity of judging. They have seen what Julian, Justin Martyr, and other apologists have written, and have been of opinion that the argument was in favor of those publications." Telling this story in his own way, and improving it—as he was fully justified in doing-Coleridge in the "Table Talk" assures his readers that Lord Kenyon, in his address to the jury in a trial for blasphemy, said, "Above all, gentlemen, need I name to you the Emperor Julian, who was so celebrated for the practice of every Christian virtue, that he was called Julian the Apostle!"

To several later judges, as well as to Kenyon, has been attributed the memorable juidicial address to the dishonest butler who had been convicted of stealing large quantities of wine from his master's cellar. "Prisoner at the bar," the judge is reported to have said, "you stand convicted on the most conclusive evidence of a crime of inexpressible atrocity—acrime that defiles the sacred springs of domestic confidence, and is calculated to strike alarm into the breast of every Englishman who invests largely in the choicer vintages of Southern Europe. Like the serpent of old you have stung the hand of your protector. For-tunate in having a generous employer, you might, without dishonesty, have continued to supply your wretched wife and children with the comforts of suffi-cient prosperity, and even with some of the luxuries of affluence; but dead to every claim of natural effection and every claim of natural affection, and blind to your own real interest, you burst through all the restraints of religion and morality, and have for many years been feathering your nest with your master's bottles."

A fair match for these is the story of an Irish priest who rebuked his parish-ioner for drunkenness, and told him that "whenever he entered an alehouse to drink, his guardian angel stood weeping at the door." "And if he had sixpence he'd be in himself," was Pat's

Shooting Foot-Pads in California. A letter from California says many of the highways of that States are infested by gauge of robbers who overhaul stage coaches and relieve the passengers of their money, and rob every one who comes in their way. The following in-cident growing out of this state of things, is related:

A quietus was given to these gentlemen by a courageous man, near Danner Lake, not long ago. They had robbed the stage of its treasure. Two men who heard of it immediately started in pursuit. In coming to a gorge, tracks of the robbers were discovered. One of the pursuers turned back to give information, the other continued the pursuit, and suddenly came upon the leader of the gang, a well-known desperado. The obber was protected breast high by a rock; and was in the act of pointing a revolver at our hero, when a ball from the latter perforated his skull, and he fell back instantly killed.

The top of the head of another of the gang was observed, just enough of it to receive a fatal blow—the blow came and he, too, fell dead. Then the third and last of the robbers was seen climbing some rocks, making an effort to escape but he was speedily recalled by a ball that pierced his heart. These three shots were made in the course of two minutes, the pursuer being armed with a repeating rifle. Some hours afterward neigh bors arrived to aid in the pursuit of the robbers; they rendered a good service as a coroner's jury, rendering a suitable verdict and burying the slain-the entire transaction, robbery, pursuit, execution, action of the jury and interment, occupying little more than half a day. These are fast people—the Californians.

Dug Up.—On the 22d ult, as Samuel Ros was engaged in digging a post-hole on hi-farm, above Limeport, in Solebury, Buck-county, Pa., near the bank of the river, he struck upon something which proved to be a human skull. Further examination de veloped a large smoking pipe, tobacco box string of beads, buckskin and, wampun-belt, &c. Samuel has no doubt but that he has discovered the resting place of one of the chiefs of the famous Delaware tribe, and perhaps the identical pipe used by William Penn at the signing of the treaty. The relic-may be seen at his residence, and he invites stigation by those interested in Indian
