EVENING BULLETIN.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1866.

TO ADVERTESERS.

In order to secure the insertion of advertisements in our regular edition, it is absolutely necessary that they be sent to the office before 12 o'clock, noon. The paper must be put to press at a particular moment, so that supplies to agents in the country may be ent off by the earliest trains in the afternoon, and with our present large edition, we cannot delay for advertisements or anything else. Our friends will therefore please send their advertisements at as early an hour in the day as possible. Those sent after 12 o'clock are likely to be omitted.

EPITHALAMIC. The fair maids of New Orleans and the Knights of the same gay city run the risk of being "shown up" in the newspapers in a rather conspicuous way, whenever they commit matrimony. For the Knights of the quill there, are the most chivalric of chevaliers, and they publicly extol the virtue, the beauty, and the bravery of most of the "happy couples" whose nuptials are advertised. For instance. the New Orleans Picayune, just received, has an editorial paragraph which—omitting the names of the bride and groom—is as follows:

"Another gallant son of Mars—one who was a brave Southern soldier during the late civil war—Mr. —, we observe, has surrendered—to woman's charms, having been married last Monday evening, by the Rev. Father —, at St. Louis Cathedral, to the beautiful Miss —. May happiness ever attend the newly married pair."

This fine figure of a metaphor, about a gallant son of Mars surrendering, &c., is very common and fashionable at the South since Lee's and Johnson's time. But there is another form of editorial announcement and congratulation which is also not uncommon. In the New Orleans Times of the same date as the paper quoted above, is a marriage announcement to which is appended the following touching paragraph: "Rarely has the married state revealed a fairer prospect than sheds its radiance over the pathway of the happy couple, whose hymineal announcement appears above. The worthy groom bears the seal of manly chivalry so universally bestowed upon her sons by the grand old Commonwealth of Virginia, and his fair bride combines all those womenly graces which distinguish those womanly graces which distinguish the daughters of Mississippi. May they enjoy all the happiness of earth in each other's love, and in the esteem and regard of their friends.' Following close after this is another marriage notice, the appendix to which seems to have been written by the same person in the same happy state of mind.

It is as follows: "One of the fairest daughters of Virginia, that noblest of Commonwealths, has been wooed and won to a Southern home by an esteemed Orleanian, 'native here and to the the happiest of social ties. May cloudless skies and happy days shed their brightness around the home of the newly wedded

The ecstatic writer of these notices is very apt to repeat himself. He calls Virginia in one place the "the grand old Commonwealth," and in another "that noblest of Commonwealths;" grandeur, age and nobility being abstract virtues. peculiar to Virginia, that are recognized all over the South. But the Ecstatic is sometimes wrong in his spelling and in his Shakspeare. "Hymineal" is Southern chivalric orthography, and "to the manor born" is Shakspeare according to the chivalric reading. But these little peculiarities can be overlooked, more particularly when one reads the sweet phrases about "the married state," and the fairer prospect that sheds its radia ance," and "the worthy groom" who bears the seal of manly chivalry that is so universally bestowed," &c., and the "fair bride" that "combines all those womanly graces which distinguish the daughters of Mississippi," and that "one of the fairest daughters of Virginia," who got "wood and won," the wooer and winner being an "esteemed Orleanian," and the "one more link," and "the invisible chain of friendship," "the happiest of social ties," and "all the happiness of earth," and the "cloudless skies and happy days," &c. &c. These are very pretty bits of writing, and if any young people about to be married want to be celebrated, they are advised to go to New Orleans, and they will be sure of a first rate notice.

"GENTLEMANLY LAWS." New York is a great city. It has its Broadway, its Fifth avenue, its Central Park, its Ben and Fernando Wood, its John Morrissey and its Judge McCunn. And apropos of the latter. The Judge has recently made a decision (he has made several that have been quite famous), in which he comments on "the gentlemanly spirit of the common law." in refusing to allow a dupe who had been fleeced by a gambler, to recover his money. The Judge evidently knows which side his bread is buttered on, and he has no notion of offending his constituency. If the emergency should arise, he would no doubt decide that it is eminently Chesterfieldian to take a gentle knock-down with brass-knuckles and refuse to appear against the knockerdown; that if Peter Funk chiseled you it would be about the fair thing to gracefully concede to Peter all the profits of the swindle; while in the many ordinary branches of swindling the fleesee could only hope to be considered a Chevalier Bayard by giving in to the fleecer, whom "the gentlemanly spirit of the common law" would disdain to prosecute. With a Morrissey for Congressman, a McCunn for a Judge, and a Boole for Alderman, what a career of glory opens before New York!

OFFICIAL TIMIDITY. It is believed by some that the reason why the city authorities manage to avoid any interference with the Fire Department, even where abuses are most flagrant and the need for reform the most pressing, is from fear that the influence of the firemen will be brought; to bear upon them at the ballot-box, and their, chances for re-election will be thus spoiled. This feeling, if it is really entertained, is as weak, mean and cowardly, as it is mistaken. It pre-supposes a clannish spirit among the firemen which makes them go in a mass for or against any man or set of men who have not only the good of the city, but the of the firemen also at good heart. This would pay the firemen a very poor compliment and if the reason was a substantial one it would be a most powerful argument for the abolition of a system which could produce such a condition of terrorism. Now, the fact is, the respectable portion of the Fire Department, and a very large proportion of it is composed of most estimable men and good citizens -understand the evils attending the present irresponsible system, and they advocate all sorts of reforms, from the mild measure, now or lately, before Councils, to the entire breaking up of the volunteer system and the establishment of a paid department in its stead. These men understand the defects of the present system, and they admit their inability to restrain the rowdy or injudicious minority which brings discredit upon the whole.

But suppose the department, or any considerable number of its members, should determine to proscribe a fearless and honest public servant; what would be the consequences? There are in the city of Philadelphia a little more than three thousand active firemen. Fully one-third of these men earnestly desire some measure of reform, and they would be more apt to vote for its advocates than against them. Take the remaining two thousand, and divide them among the two hundred and odd voting precincts in the city, and it would make less than ten firemen to each precinct. Deduct from this number those who are not entiled to vote, and those who will vote their party ticket with-out regard to the fire question, and the bugbear sinks into ridiculous insignificance. But it must the remembered that proscription is a game that works both ways, and the fearless candidate would be apt to gain two votes for every one cast against him from motives of revenge. Ex-Mayor Henry was openly and avowedly in favor of a paid Fire Department, and in one of his annual message he dwelt at length upon the evils of the volunteer system and urged the establishment of a paid department. Mr. Henry was twice reelected after this, and had he not declined manor born,' adding one more link to the a re-nomination he would now be filling invisible chain of friendship which binds the Mayoral chair. The fear of the Fire the city of Richmond and New Orleans in Department, or of any other combined "Popping the Question, &c. Copies of Martin Popping the Richmond and New Orleans in Department, or of any other combined "Popping the Question, &c. Copies of Martin Popping the Richmond and New Orleans in Department, or of any other combined "Popping the Question, &c. Copies of Martin Richmond and New Orleans in Department, or of any other combined "Popping the Question, &c. Copies of Martin Richmond and Richmond Ric Department, or of any other combined influence, is a motive for action, that is mean, cowardly and unmanly, and no servant of the people should allow himself to be influenced in his official action by any such feeling.

> DEATH OF BISHOP ELLIOTT. The telegraph announces the death, at Savannah, of Rt. Rev. Stephen Elliott, D. D. Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Georgia. Bishop Elliott has long occupied a commanding position in his Church, and his loss will be severely felt throughout his own diocese and the whole South. He was the son of Stephen Elliott, L. L. D., a celebrated naturalist and scholar of South Carolina, and was born at Beaufort, S. C. in 1806. He graduated at Havvard in 1824 and entered the ministry in 1835. He was, for several years, professor of sacred literature in the South Carolina college, where he remained until 1840, when he was elected Bishop of Georgia, being consecrated in February. 1841.

> Bishop Elliott was a man of fine presence and courtly and polished manners, an accomplished scholar and one of the most eloquent divines of the Episcopal Church. Identified, theologically, with the Evangelical side of his denomination, he at all times exercised a powerful influence in the House of Bishops and throughout the Church generally, while at the South he was venerated with all the enthusiasm of a true devotion. Up to the time of the rebellion, Bishop Elliott had almost as many friends at the North as at the South. He was a most welcome visitor to the Church at the North, and every pulpit of his denomination was freely thrown open for the exercise of his powerful, chaste and eloquent oratory. Like most South Carolinians of the several learned professions. Bishop Elliott was always more or less of a politician, and with the breaking out of the rebellion, he threw himself into the struggle with a violence which was only exceeded by the notorious Bishop of Tennessee. The whole power of his commanding influence was exerted to take his portion of the Church out of communion with the Episcopal Church of the United States and afterwards to keep it out. His was the genius that inspired all the movements of his denomination in the interests of the rebellion, and long after armed opposition to the Government had ceased, this powerful prelate resisted all ideas of ecclesiastical reconstruction except upon the terms which he dictated of an absolute silence on the part of the loyal Episcopal Church of the North, on all matters connected with the rebellion. Like Bishop Polk, Bishop Elliott inflicted an irreparable injury upon himself, in the esteem confidence and affection of thousands of his old friends, by the prominent and violent way in which he identified himself with the bad cause of the rebellion. It was the natural result of his life-training in the midst of the pernicious atmosphere of South Carolina politics, and he, like many another Christian minister. failed to appreciate or resist the insidious influences amongst which his lot was

As a bold, fearless, eloquent preacher and bishop; as a man of spotless personal character, and of rare culture and refinement; as one who was, in all relations where his political heresy did not assert itself, a fine model of the Christian gentleman, Bishop Elliott deservedly occupies a distinguished place in the annals of the American Church, and it is with a sincere regret that the journalist, in the honest discharge of his duty, is compelled to record one word that detracts from the otherwise bright lustre of a brilliant and useful life. The Best Proofs of Good Management.

From official returns recently made to the Massachusetts Insurance Department we learn that the income of the North America Life Insurance Company, for the year ending November 1, 1866, is $1,208,743, and the present assets $1,265,272. The losses paid during the same time were but 71 per cent. and the total expenditures only 223 percent of the income. These very small ratios are less than those of any other New York Company of more than two years' experience. The above figures being the representation of the business of the Company for the fourth year of its existence, show results never before achieved by any similar institution, and reflect honor and credit upon both its administration and its efficient agents, as the greatest danger to which Life Insurance Companies are exposed, is extravagant and needless expenditures. We, the friends of this Company, are not at all surprised at such unparalleled success, knowing, as we do, that those who have accomplished these very beneficial and highly satisfactory results, are gentlemen of the highest integrity and ability, and have devoted the best years of their lives to the study of Life Insurance, and to the perfection of the popular plan upon which the North America is now conducted. The policies of this Companyare peculiar, both in point of security and liberality, being secured by pledge of public stocks and free from the usual restrictions in travel, residence and employment, together with a grace of thirty days in all renewal payments.

The Philadelphia branch of this institution is under the management of Nelson F. Evans, Esq., Nos. 434 and 436 Walnut street, where it is unnecessary to say a most thriving business has been done, over 1,300 policies having been issued to some of our most prominent and respectable townsmen.

EARLE'S GALLERIES .- We take this opportunity to express a little of our admiration for the wonderful collection of works of art now arranged for the holidays at Earle's galleries, on Chestnut street. The new styles of mirrors are most elegant, while of modern oil paintings there is a host, by the most famous foreign and American artists. Among them are gems by Souderman, Basch, Millner, Weber and others. There are some very fine groups of statuary by shall's great engraving of Lincoln may also be had at Earle's, together with every conceivable kind of engraving or painting. One can pass an hour charmingly in enjoying the treasures of art collected there.

THE CROSBY OPERA HOUSE ASSOCIATION. -By the advertisement in another column t will be seen that it is officially announced that the drawing of the Crosby Opera House Association is fixed for January 21st, and that the committee for the Eastern States to represent the subscribers has been appointed. The names will be found in the advertisement. Those who wish to subscribe should do so at the earliest moment. Mr. T. B. Pugh is the Philadelphia agent.
