A Strange Debauch.

A singular orgie took place in England last month at New Brighton, a town on the Mersey. A brig laden with rum went to pieces, and the casks floated toward shore. The populace crowded down to share the plunder, and the account says:

"Servants and married women were of the number. The crowd got hold of cask after cask, which they speedily broached; and then they began to drink the raw rum, some of it above proof, with fierce gusto. Several of the puncheons washed ashore were turned on end, the heads knocked out, and the contents drunk to the dregs; others were pierced and sucked at in turns by the maddened savages. The consequences of the furious debauch soon appeared in staggering of helpless groups, blind with intoxication, yelling and cursing till they fell apparently dead upon the sand, or were dragged by the heels out of the surf into places of safety. One young man guzzled the fiery liquid till he fell down and died, without any return of consciousness; another, after a maniacal draught of it, tumbled headforemost into a pool among the rocks, and was well nigh drowned before he was taken out. A painter poured the paint from his pot, wiped it with grass and drank the raw rum till he wallowed insensible on the sea beach. A number of servant girls and married women who went down to the beach to see the wreck, which had been and was washing ashore, were prevailed upon to taste the rum. The consequences can be conjectured. Numbers of the females sunk into a state of insensibility, and were subjected to the greatest indignities. One young woman, very well connected, in company with a more elderly female, was prevailed upon to take some of the raw spirits, and she, like many others, was treated with the greatest violence, having been attacked by three ruffians. She was discovered at a late hour last night, lying in the sand-hills, quite unconscious, and taken to her home by the police."
