The increase of population by births, the Commissioners observe, must principally depend on the proportion which those between the ages of twenty and thirty-five bear to the rest of the community. The proportion of such persons in the population of the whole king dom is about twenty-five per cent., whil their proportion in the emigration of the present day is more than fifty-two per cent. ""When the fullest deductions have been made for emigration, the Irish population returns still show large deficiences, which can only be accounted for by admitting a decline in the power of the population to reproduce itself. The natural increase of the popula tion of Ireland in the period between 183 and 1841 was one-tenth per cent. per annum. In the period 1841-1851, which included several terrible years of famine, fever and flight, it of course fell enormously; but even between 1851 and 1861, when there was nothing to produce a specially injurious effect upon the health of the people, the natural increase of the population was only 70 per cent. per annum. In the ten years before 1861 the population fell from 6,515,793 to 5.764,543. A natural increase of 460,000 souls was to be set figainst an emigration of 1.210. 000, and the decrease of the population was 57,251. In the six years since 1861 as many
