THE SULFAN IN LONDON. Abdul-Aziz, the Sultan of Turkey, is at this moment in England, the guest of Queen Victoria in Buckingham Palace, which gloomy establishment has been placed at the disposal of his Mohammedan Majesty. The Queen has not often condescended, since her widowhood, to entertain royal visitors from abroad, and she has even treated with marked disrespect the mother-in-law of the Prince of Wales, the Queen of Denmark, in her repeated excursions to England. But she makes an exception in behalf of the monarch of the Sublime Porte, who is a Mussulman, a despot, a persecutor of the Christians in the Greek Islands, and other parts of his dominions, and stready had a wife and family. It must strike every one as singular that should receive from the Queen and people of England a welcome such as they have not he sneaked back home, and having found that offered to any foreign sovereign, since the life heel was raised to crush the miscrable But Sultans seldom travel even in their own dominions, and when one goes so far as Great verted secessionist, and an unreconstructed tion of reconstruction which he has officially Britain, the mere novelty of the sight is rebel enough to cause an excitement.
