The "Oberon" overture was admirably played. under the leadership of Herr Leopold Engelke, who fulfilled his onerous duties in a masteriy manner throughout the entire concert. The first vocal piece was the hymn "To Hertha," by Kuntz, sung in beautiful style by the New York Societies led by Herr A. Paur Disputs of the White Castile Soap, landing from Brig Pennsylvania the leadership of Herr Leopold Engelke, Runtz, stung in Deathtin style by the New York Societies, led by Herr A. Paur. Director of the Liederkrantz Society. Then came the Grand Chorus "Harmony." by Tschirch, and a grand chorus it was. The mighty effect of a thousand sturdy voices marching through their chorus it was. The mighty effect of a thousand sturdy voices marching through their massive harmonies, with a marvellous precision of time and an even balancing of the several parts, which could not be excelled by a picked martet cannot be adequately described. There parts, which could not be excelled by a picked quartet, cannot be adequately described. There was a wonderful steadiness of tone and careful attention to time and effect which spoke volumes in favor of the numerous directors and members of the several societies. The tenor solo in this grand chorus, was sung by Herr Jacob Graf of this city, with remarkable taste and purity, his Herr Lenschow is a magnetic sort of a leader, and it was easy to see how he communicated his own musical enthusiasm to his fine body of vocalists. The second part of the Concert one need with selections from 17ths ne Concert opened with selections from "The Huguenots," admirably performed by the orchesrn; followed by another Grand Chorus by Krebs, 'Hall to thee, Goddess of Long," by the combined societies. This chorus abounds with the grand societies. This chorus abounds with the grand choral effects of the German School, and concludes with a superb piece of stately harmony. The next chorus was the "Männergesang," by Abt, sung by the Philadelphia societies, without accompaniment. The Philadelphians will main-sarily lost to some considerable extent. But may safely be said that Handel's great masterplec has never been performed by male voices in Phila delphia as it was last night. The whole enter-tainment was a delightful one, and reflects great honor upon the accomplished director, H Engelke, and upon all those who so faithfu assisted him in presenting this great treat to the musical public of Philadelphia. During yesterday the Germans were busily en gaged in adding to the decorations of their head quarters and other buildings. Rhawn, grand chorus, was sung by herr according this city, with remarkable taste and purity, his sweet, clear tenor filling the vast building in a style which interrupted the programme with a thundering encore. The Fugue with which the chorus concludes was a triumphant success. As the theme was taken up by one part after another, pealed out from the bruzen lungs of the trumpets and trombones and then echoed again around the stage by the steadfast masses of singers, it was like reverberations of a grand thunder-peal as it rolls from hill-side to hill-side in some mountain valley.

The next chorus was the "Twenty-fourth Psalm," by Otto, sung by the Baltimore societies, under the direction of Herr Charles Leuschow, of the Baltimore Liederkranz. This was one of the choicest gems of the evening, the difficult modulations of the elaborate composition being given with the utmost accuracy and precision.
